

What can you do to change someone's life?

Seventeen-year-old Courtney lives in Edinburgh with her dad, Richie, a former addict who was homeless for much of his life. Things got so bad at one point that Courtney decided to cut him out of her life and they went for months without contact.

Today, Courtney's dad has turned his life around. Inspired to help others, he started his own charity supporting people experiencing homelessness and addiction. With funding from Comic Relief, Steps to Hope provides temporary accommodation to people in need, while working with them towards longer-term solutions. Courtney now volunteers for his charity five times a week.

It's estimated there are hundreds of thousands of people in the UK without a secure place to call home. By raising money this Red Nose Day, you will be helping to support them. Find out more about how to get involved at comicrelief.com/courtney

"The people that we help are more than homeless people and addicts. They're somebody's loved one."

Take action

It's more important than ever at the moment that we all help each other, whether it's by supporting family and friends, volunteering in your community or raising money this Red Nose Day.

It's time to get involved and make a difference.
