

Role title: Digital Designer
Reports to: Lara Mendonça - Lead Digital Designer	Type of role: Volunteer / Unpaid
Location: London

Purpose of the role

This role exists because...

The Digital team is responsible for solving problems for Pride in London teams by designing and building great internet. We make sure that our digital ecosystem is beautiful, accessible, and easy to use for all. Whilst we set a foundation for our design system and way of working as a design team last year, we still have a way to go in working well with development and other Pride teams.

Role responsibilities and experience

Responsibilities:

- Collaborate with leads and wider team on projects
- Develop and maintain our style guide and component library
- Demonstrate the high standards of design, prototyping and documentation expected from the rest of the team
- Prepare for and lead user research and testing sessions
- Work in cross-functional teams to solve design problems and implement feedback from stakeholders
- Participate in group design critiques and offer feedback to other team members
- Documenting design decisions and rationale in a way that is easy for non-technical people to understand

Person specification:

You'll ace this if you:

- Bases your design decisions on objective user feedback and behaviours
- Are passionate about accessible and inclusive design
- Are proactive, reliable and organised
- Aren't afraid to provide timely and constructive feedback to your team
- Have experience with leading design tools (we love Sketch, Invision and Zeplin!)

- Feel strongly about using your craft for social change

Time commitment:

Pride work load varies throughout the year, but this role will require 4-8 hours of your time a week. We are all volunteers and work full time so hours and delivery can be flexible.

You'll be expected to attend regular team meetings (once a month on a Saturday morning), join calls/reply to emails relating to your project between these.
