Alex Shevchenko is a co-founder of Grammarly and a member of the board. He currently focuses on product strategy and product innovation as a member of Grammarly's Core Product team. Since its founding in 2009, Grammarly has grown from a subscription-based tool for students to the world's leading AI communication assistant, serving over 40 million users and 50,000 organizations.

Alex finds inspiration in watching Grammarly's team members grow, thrive, and become experts in their respective fields. Prior to co-founding Grammarly, he was involved in creating MyDropBox, a plagiarism detection company that grew to serve over 2 million students in two years before being acquired by Blackboard Inc.

He holds a BBA from the International University in Vienna, Austria, and an MBA from the University of Toronto School of Management.
