Alex Shevchenko is a co-founder of Grammarly and a board member at Grammarly. He also facilitates onboarding sessions to introduce new team members to the company's history and products. Since its founding in 2009, Grammarly has grown from a subscription-based tool for students to the world's leading AI communication assistant, serving over 30 million users and 70,000 professional teams.

Alex finds inspiration in watching Grammarly's team members grow, thrive, and become experts in their respective fields. Prior to co-founding Grammarly, he was involved in creating MyDropBox, a plagiarism detection company that grew to serve over 2 million students in two years before being acquired by Blackboard Inc.

In addition to his professional pursuits, Alex is a dedicated meditator and takes pride in his streak of meditating every day for more than 2,000 days.

He holds a BBA from the International University in Vienna, Austria, and an MBA from the University of Toronto School of Management.
