Key Macro Events 29 January – 2 February 2024

Eurozone – Eurozone GDP probably changed by -0.2% qoq in 23Q4. In our base case for the eurozone economy we see GDP roughly stabilising in 24Q1, but based on hard economic data for October-November that was published in recent weeks, and on the outcome of various business and consumer surveys for December-January, we think that the risks to our forecasts are tilted toward a somewhat deeper and longer contraction in GDP.

Eurozone HICP inflation is expected to have stabilised at 2.9% in January. Core HICP inflation, in contrast, is expected to have declined in January, as the upward impact of past rises in energy prices is petering out. On top of that underlying inflationary pressures are easing due to the economic weakness that started in 22Q4 and has continued throughout 2023.

- US We expect the Fed to keep policy on hold. There is no update to the projections at this meeting, leaving markets to focus on Chair Powell's press conference remarks. We expect the recent tone of commentary to be maintained, with acknowledgement of the continued progress on inflation, but continued vigilance given the recent resilience in activity. There may also be hints at a potentially earlier winddown of QT, as signalled by the December FOMC minutes. For payrolls on Friday, we expect a slowing in jobs growth and a slight rise in the unemployment rate. Wage growth is expected to fall back to more benign levels.
- UK We expect the Bank of England to keep policy on hold. While the statement is likely to acknowledge the progress on inflation, the MPC will want to see further progress on wage growth before being ready to start cutting rates. Our base case is that rate cuts start in August.
- China Official PMIs (due on Wednesday) and Caixin's manufacturing PMI (Thursday) for January are generally expected to show a modest pick-up compared to December. This partly reflects the fact that activity is often picking up in the period prior to the Lunar New Year break, that will start on 10 February this year.
