TIFF TO REFOCUS KIDS PROGRAMMING FOR AGES 14 AND UP

TORONTO — TIFF announced today it is changing how it serves young cinephiles year-round through a reimagining of its family programming. The longstanding annual TIFF Kids International Film Festival will be retired and digiPlaySpace, the interactive playground for kids, will be rebranded and revamped for a 14+ audience. Details of this exciting new exhibition at TIFF Bell Lightbox will be announced in the coming months.

TIFF will continue to showcase family-friendly films throughout the year and will host workshops and screenings for high-school students. TIFF remains committed to inclusiveness, and will continue to provide free and subsidised access for high school students and families who otherwise may not be able to attend. The shift reflects the organization’s five-year Strategic Plan and the evolution of TIFF audiences.

TIFF Artistic Director and Co-Head Cameron Bailey says the TIFF Kids International Film Festival has held a special place at the organization over the past two decades, and the decision to retire the festival was not made lightly.

“We refreshed our offerings because we’re listening very closely to our audiences, and continuing our Audience First strategy,” says Bailey. “We’ve heard that people are seeking unique experiences and more variety, and this pivot means we can invest greater energy and resources into better serving our family and youth audiences — a new generation of film lovers who are incredibly passionate about culture and the discovery of film. TIFF will always be a place for lifelong learning where people of all ages and walks of life can come together to experience programming that transforms the way they see the world.”

The lineup for TIFF Next Wave Film Festival, a highlight of our youth programming, will be announced in early January. The festival, running February 14–17, 2019, features films, a Young Creators Co-Lab and Showcase, industry guests, and the Opening Night event, Battle of the Scores.
