“Hungry, new talent is the lifeblood of this industry,” said Cameron Bailey, Artistic Director of TIFF. “This year’s group are some of the most captivating, charismatic, and promising young Canadian talents Rising Stars has ever seen, so it’s no surprise they’re featured in some of the Festival’s most highly anticipated films. They are the ones to watch.”

The TIFF Rising Stars programme will see the selected actors experience a unique and engaging Festival. They will have access to professional development sessions, Industry events, red carpets, and valuable networking opportunities.

This year, three Rising Stars are featured in films in TIFF’s Official Selection. Jess Salgueiro stars in the Special Presentations programme’s Opening Night Film MOUTHPIECE, directed by legendary Canadian filmmaker Patricia Rozema and adapted from the award-winning play of the same name by Amy Nostbakken and Norah Sadava. Lamar Johnson will appear in George Tillman, Jr.’s adaptation The Hate U Give, a timely tale of police violence in the Black Lives Matter era, alongside a star-studded cast that includes Amandla Stenberg, Regina Hall, and Issa Rae. And Michaela Kurimsky will appear in Jasmin Mozaffari’s Firecrackers, a drama about the friendship of two young women desperate to escape their repressive small town.

TIFF will announce its four international Rising Stars on August 16.
