LAS Airport Joins Hidden Disabilities Sunflower Program

Harry Reid International Airport (LAS) is proud to announce participation in the Hidden Disabilities Sunflower program, a global initiative designed to improve the travel experience for individuals with non-visible disabilities. The program empowers travelers to discreetly signal that they may need additional support, time, or understanding while navigating the airport.

The Sunflower program uses a recognizable green lanyard adorned with a sunflower pattern. Wearing the lanyard serves as a subtle indicator to airport staff that the traveler, or a member of their party, may have a hidden disability. LAS employees wearing sunflower pins have received specialized training and are prepared to offer extra assistance when needed.

“Airports can be overwhelming environments,” said James C. Chrisley, Clark County Director of Aviation. “As the gateway to everything for Southern Nevada, we have a responsibility to ensure every traveler feels supported. By embracing the Sunflower program, we’re reinforcing that commitment as a gateway that cares. This initiative reflects our larger mission to make LAS a place where every traveler feels welcomed and confident throughout their journey.”

There are no eligibility requirements to request or wear a Sunflower lanyard. It is a simple but powerful tool that communicates a need for patience and support throughout the travel experience. Lanyards are available free of charge at all Information Counters throughout the airport. While the lanyard does not provide priority access or expedited screening through the TSA security checkpoints, it helps airport staff better understand when a traveler may benefit from additional time or assistance.

Travelers may also request a Sunflower lanyard before their trip. By visiting our Special Assistance webpage, and completing the online request form, passengers can have a lanyard mailed directly to their home at no cost. This option ensures travelers have what they need in hand prior to arriving at the airport, offering added convenience and peace of mind.
