While many small business operators are interested in doing business at McCarran International Airport, some may still be unaware of the steps needed before one can enter into a working relationship with the Clark County Department of Aviation. From governmental guidelines to complex security regulations, airports represent a unique work environment. Getting a foot in the door requires extra steps that are typically unfamiliar to most small business operators.

Clark County leaders hope to help interested small business operators navigate that process by sharing information at a free, two-hour workshop scheduled for 6 p.m. Tuesday at the Clark County Government Center.

Join Commissioner Lawrence Weekly, Rosemary Vassiliadis and members of the Department of Aviation's Business office to learn how to get started on the process of bringing your store, restaurant or kiosk concession to one of the busiest airports in the world. Topics to be covered include the Request for Proposal (RFP) process; an overview of the airport operating environment; and details on the Disadvantaged Business Enterprise and Airport Concessions Disadvantaged Business Enterprise programs.
