Dawn of modern Japan

The Tomioka Silk Mill is a model silk-reeling factory established by the Meiji government in 1872 for Japan's modernization. After the Meiji Restoration, the government promoted modernization of industries and technologies to achieve equal status with Western countries. As a way to collect the funds for this modernization, the government focused on exporting raw silk. The government decided to build government-run model factories with Western silk-reeling machines to improve the quality of the raw silk, increase production, and train engineers. This is how the Tomioka Silk Mill was built, and the buildings remain almost unchanged even today.

One of three famous scenic spots in Japan

Mt. Myogi

The breathtaking scenery is listed in 100 Landscapes of Japan.

Mt. Myogi is known as one of the three mountains of Jomo (the old name for Gunma) along with Mt. Akagi and Mt. Haruna. The area of Mt. Myogi called Omote-Myogi on the northwest side comprises Hakuun-zan, Kondo-san and Kinkai-san, while Ura-Myogi on the southeast side includes Yakyu-san, Chosu-no-kashira and Otake. Collectively the area is known as one of the three famous scenic spots for its unusual rock formations and craggy peaks. Rock arches, spires and other unusual natural formations create an amazing landscape, especially in spring when the mountain comes alive with new green foliage and cherry blossoms, and in fall when the fiery fall colors paint the mountainsides.

Designated national treasure

Myogi Shrine

The shrine has around 1,500 years of history and sits on the side of Hakuun-zan, the main peak of Mt. Myogi. Behind the brightly colored vermillion outer gate and the embellished gabled gate lies an ornate main hall painted in black lacquer and featuring the gongen-zukuri architectural style of connected buildings. The beautiful weeping cherry trees along the path to the main shrine and on the shrine grounds are more than 200 years old. The shrine has become popular as a "power spot," or place of special energy.

Origin of the "dai" character...

The character for "big" (dai/大) can be seen in white on the side of Hakuun-zan. The character dai represents Myogi Dai Gongen, the title of an abbot who was deified after his death. The character has served as a landmark for people travelling along the Nakasendo road since the Edo Period.

Mt. Myogi Panorama Park

The area is popular for its 360-degree panoramic views of Mt. Myogi (Hakuun-zan, Kondo-san and Kinkai-san) as well as the Kanto Plain to the east and Mt. Tsukuba in the distance. Many fun family activities are available in the park, including the Tomioka City Myogi Furusato Museum, which exhibits many works of art using the motif of Mt. Myogi, and Momiji-no-Yu, a hot spring offering stunning views from its outdoor baths.

An unusual shrine lies at the bottom of the stone steps

Ichinomiya Nukisaki Shrine

Enveloped by ancient forest with trees over 1,000 years old, the area has a sublime and majestic atmosphere. The important shrine is given the highest rank in the register of Japanese shrines. In 531, Futsunushi no Kami, the god of war, and Hime Okami, the goddess of agriculture and weaving, were enshrined here. The shrine has an unusual construction for Japan, with a down-sloping entrance path descending to the main building. It is one of three major shrines to feature this construction. The main building, worship hall and two-story gate were rebuilt by the third shogun Tokugawa Iemitsu in 1635 and extensively repaired by the fifth shogun Tokugawa Tsunayoshi. They are still standing today.

Social Education Hall

These modern Japanese buildings are made entirely of cypress and were built in 1936 as the Togoku Keishin Dojo, the predecessor to the Social Education Hall. Their simple yet elegant atmosphere creates a tranquil feel when the buildings host special seasonal exhibits, tea ceremony, and other events. The buildings were registered as a Tangible Cultural Property of Japan on July 8, 2008 in recognition of their historical, cultural and architectural values.

Oshima Fire Festival

The Oshima Fire Festival is a summer tradition of lighting a Japanese character on the mountain in fire. The festival started from the ritual of lighting 108 torches to guide the souls of ancestors returning to their homes for the Obon festival. A kanji character is chosen each year to reflect local residents' feelings and burned on the mountainside while fireworks also light up the sky, creating an amazing spectacle.
