

Abstraction in Medieval Art

Beyond the Ornament

Edited by Elina Gertsman

Amsterdam
University
Press

A
X
X
P

Amsterdam
University
Press

Abstraction in Medieval Art

Amsterdam
University
Press

Abstraction in Medieval Art

Beyond the Ornament

Edited by Elina Gertsman

Amsterdam University Press

Amsterdam
University
Press

The publication of this book is made possible by a grant from the Hallinan Fund at Case Western Reserve University.

Cover illustration: Figure 11 from Hrabanus Maurus, In Praise of the Holy Cross, 847, Mainz. Paris, Bibliothèque nationale de France, MS lat. 2422, fol. 13v. Photo courtesy of the Bibliothèque nationale de France.

Cover design: Coördesign, Leiden

Lay-out: Crius Group, Hulshout

ISBN 978 94 6298 989 4
e-ISBN 978 90 4854 267 3
DOI 10.5117/9789462989894
NUR 684

© The authors / Amsterdam University Press B.V., Amsterdam 2021

All rights reserved. Without limiting the rights under copyright reserved above, no part of this book may be reproduced, stored in or introduced into a retrieval system, or transmitted, in any form or by any means (electronic, mechanical, photocopying, recording or otherwise) without the written permission of both the copyright owner and the author of the book.

Every effort has been made to obtain permission to use all copyrighted illustrations reproduced in this book. Nonetheless, whosoever believes to have rights to this material is advised to contact the publisher.

Amsterdam
University
Press

Table of Contents

Acknowledgments	7
Preface: Withdrawal and Presence Elina Gertsman	17
Part I Abstraction / Aporia / Unknowability
1. Colour as Subject Vincent Debais	33
2. Abstraction's Gothic Grounds Aden Kumler	55
3. Abstraction in the Kennicott Bible Adam S. Cohen and Linda Safran	89
4. Back-to-Front: Abstraction and Figuration in Bosch's Visions of the Hereafter Robert Mills	115
Part II Abstraction / Figuration / Signification
5. The Painted Logos: Abstraction as Exegesis in the Ashburnham Pentateuch Danny Smith	141
6. The Sign within the Form, the Form without the Sign: Monograms and Pseudo-Monograms as Abstractions in Mozarabic Antiphonaries Benjamin C. Tilghman	167

7. Ornament and Abstraction: A New Approach to Understanding Ornamented Writing in the Making of Illuminated Manuscripts around 1000 Gia Toussaint	191
8. The Double-Sided Image: Abstraction and Figuration in Early Medieval Painting Nancy Thebaut	213
 Part III Abstraction / Epistemology / Perception
9. Birds of Defiance: Jewelled Resistance to Modern Abstractions Danielle B. Joyner	245
10. Early Romanesque Abstraction and the 'Unconditionally Two- dimensional Surface' Megan C. McNamee	267
11. Functional Abstraction in Medieval Anatomical Diagrams Taylor McCall	285
12. Imaging Perfection(s) in Hebrew Illuminated Manuscripts Julie A. Harris	309
13. Response: Astral Abstraction Herbert L. Kessler	329
14. Coda: Carolingian Art As Conceptual Art? Charlotte Denoël	355
 Index	 381

Acknowledgments

My utmost thanks to my contributors for their infinite patience and perseverance in the face of the pandemic, which slowed us down considerably; to the Hallinan Fund at Case Western Reserve University that made it possible for this book to be published in brilliant colour; to Erika Gaffney, who shepherded this volume with a serenity peculiar to her and her alone; to my fantastic PhD students and research assistants Russell David Green and Reed O'Mara for their heroic work on the volume; and to my beloved family, as always.

Amsterdam
University
Press

Illustrations

- Figure 0-1. Matzah, the Hispano-Moresque Haggadah, 1275-1324. London, British Library, Or. 2737, fol. 22r. Photo: The British Library. 18
- Figure 0-2. 'Matzah', the Hispano-Moresque Haggadah, 1275-1324. London, British Library, Or. 2737, fol. 21v. Photo: The British Library. 19
- Figure 1-1. Silos Beatus, 1091-1109. London, British Library, Add. 11695, fol. 125v. Photo: The British Library. 35
- Figure 1-2. Urgell Beatus, c. 975. Seu d'Urgell, Museo Diocesano, ms. 501, fol. 123v. Previously reproduced in Francisco Prado-Vilar, "Silentium: El silencio cósmico como imagen en la Edad Media y la Modernidad," Revista de poética medieval 27 (2013): 21-43. 36
- Figure 1-3. Cologne Gospels, c. 1030. New York, Morgan Library, ms. 651, fols. 8v-9r. 38
- Figure 1-4. St. Vitus Sacramentary, c. 1050. Freiburg, Universitätsbibliothek, cod. 360a, fol. 20r. 40
- Figure 1-5. Biblical narratives on the vault, c. 1100. Saint-Savin-sur-Gartempe, abbey church, nave. Photo: Vincent Debiais. 43
- Figure 1-6. Gospels of St. Andrew of Cologne, end of the 10th century. Darmstadt, Hessisches Landesmuseum, Inv. Nr. KG 54: 213a, b, fol. 126v. Previously reproduced in Herbert Kessler, Seeing Medieval Art (Broadview Press, 2005), cover. 47
- Figure 2-1. Guillaume de Digulleville, Pèlerinage de l'âme, c. 1404-1405. Paris, Bibliothèque nationale de France, MS fr. 829, fol. 219v, detail. Photo courtesy of the Bibliothèque nationale de France. 57
- Figure 2-2. Vincent of Beauvais, Speculum historiale, 1346. Lyon, BM, MS fr. 182 (110), fol. 233r. Photo: IRHT, courtesy of the IRHT and the Bibliothèque municipale de Lyon. 59
- Figure 2-3. Guillaume de Digulleville, Pèlerinage de l'âme, c. 1404-1405. Paris, Bibliothèque nationale de France, MS fr. 829, fol. 39r. Photo courtesy of the Bibliothèque nationale de France. 60
- Figure 2-4. Guillaume de Digulleville, Pèlerinage de l'âme, c. 1404-1405. Paris, Bibliothèque nationale de France, MS fr. 829, fol. 10v. Photo courtesy of the Bibliothèque nationale de France. 61
- Figure 2-5. Guillaume de Digulleville, Pèlerinage de l'âme, c. 1404-1405. Paris, Bibliothèque nationale de France, MS fr. 829, fol. 39r. Photo courtesy of the Bibliothèque nationale de France. 62
- Figure 2-6. Grandes Chroniques de France, after 1380. London, British Library, Royal MS 20.C.VII, fol. 107v, detail. Photo courtesy of the British Library Board. 64

- Figure 2-7. Guillaume de Digulleville, Pèlerinage de l'âme, c. 1390-1401. Paris, Bibliothèque nationale de France, MS fr. 12465, fol. 147v, detail. Photo courtesy of the Bibliothèque nationale de France. 66
- Figure 3-1. Front (right) and rear (left) bindings with abstract ornament in relief, the Kennicott Bible, 1476. Oxford, Bodleian Lib., MS. Kenn. 1. Photo © The Bodleian Libraries, The University of Oxford. 90
- Figure 3-2. Front (right) and rear (left) pastedowns, the Kennicott Bible, 1476. Oxford, Bodleian Lib., MS. Kenn. 1. Photo © The Bodleian Libraries, The University of Oxford. 92
- Figure 3-3. Joseph ibn Hayyim, abstract ornament, the Kennicott Bible, 1476. Oxford, Bodleian Lib., MS. Kenn. 1, fols. 119v (strapwork panel at end of Deuteronomy) and 120r ('carpet' page with interlace frame for bleed-through of first page with Temple implements). Photo © The Bodleian Libraries, The University of Oxford. 92
- Figure 3-4. Joseph ibn Hayyim, abstract ornament, the Kennicott Bible, 1476. Oxford, Bodleian Lib., MS. Kenn. 1, fols. 121v (bleed-through of 'carpet' page with Temple implements) and 122r (carpet page with dragons in spandrels). Photo © The Bodleian Libraries, The University of Oxford. 93
- Figure 3-5. Joseph ibn Hayyim, abstract ornament, the Kennicott Bible, 1476. Oxford, Bodleian Lib., MS. Kenn. 1, fols. 122v (interlaced six-pointed star in interlace roundel) and 123r ('carpet' page with gold on blue strapwork forming eight-pointed stars). Photo © The Bodleian Libraries, The University of Oxford. 93
- Figure 3-6. Joseph ibn Hayyim, abstract ornament, the Kennicott Bible, 1476. Oxford, Bodleian Lib., MS. Kenn. 1, fols. 317v-318r, 'carpet' pages with micrographic interlace composed of verses from Psalms. Photo © The Bodleian Libraries, The University of Oxford. 94
- Figure 3-7. Joseph ibn Hayyim, abstract ornament, the Kennicott Bible, 1476. Oxford, Bodleian Lib., MS. Kenn. 1, fols. 352r (left; strapwork panel at end of Chronicles) and, on the reverse (right), fol. 352v ('carpet' page preceding Psalms on fol. 353r). Photo © The Bodleian Libraries, The University of Oxford. 94
- Figure 4-1. Hieronymus Bosch, Visions of the Hereafter, c. 1505-1515, featuring from left to right The Fall of the Damned, The River to Hell (or Purgatory), The Garden of Eden, and The Ascent of the Blessed. Oil on oak panel, each panel approx. 89 × 40 cm. Venice, Museo di Palazzo Grimani. Source: Bosch Research and Conservation Project, <http://boschproject.org>. 116

- Figure 4-2. Hieronymus Bosch, images on reverse of Visions of the Hereafter panels, c. 1505-1515. Source: Bosch Research and Conservation Project, <http://boschproject.org>. 117
- Figure 4-3. Jan Provoost, exterior wings from Triptych with the Virgin and Child, John the Evangelist, and Mary Magdalene, c. 1520-1525. Oil on panel, 44.3 × 30.5 cm. The Hague, Mauritshuis. 118
- Figure 4-4. Workshop of Hieronymus Bosch, exterior wings of Job Triptych, c. 1510-1520. Oil on oak panel, left wing 98.1 × 30.5 cm, right wing 97.8 × 30.2 cm. Bruges, Stad Brugge, Groeningemuseum (on loan from Church of Saint James the Greater, Hoeke, Damme). Source: Musea Brugge, www.lukasweb.be—Art in Flanders, photo Hugo Maertens. 119
- Figure 4-5. Hieronymus Bosch, detail of reverse of The Ascent of the Blessed panel from Visions of the Hereafter. Source: Bosch Research and Conservation Project, <http://boschproject.org>. 122
- Figure 4-6. Hieronymus Bosch, detail of The Ascent of the Blessed panel from Visions of the Hereafter. Source: Bosch Research and Conservation Project, <http://boschproject.org>. 127
- Figure 5-1. Creation, Ashburnham Pentateuch, 6th century, with 9th-century repainting. Paris, Bibliothèque nationale de France, MS nouv. acq. lat. 2334, fol. iv. Photo courtesy of the Bibliothèque nationale de France. 142
- Figure 5-2. God the Son, Ashburnham Pentateuch. Paris, Bibliothèque nationale de France, MS nouv. acq. lat. 2334, fol. iv, detail. Photo courtesy of the Bibliothèque nationale de France. 143
- Figure 5-3. Barnett Newman, Onement 1, 1948. Oil on canvas and oil on masking tape on canvas. 27 1/4 × 16 1/4" (69.2 × 41.2 cm). 390.1992. Museum of Modern Art, New York, Gift of Annalee Newman. © 2018 Barnett and Annalee Newman Foundation / Artists Rights Society (ARS), New York. 145
- Figure 5-4. God the Son, Ashburnham Pentateuch. Paris, Bibliothèque nationale de France, MS nouv. acq. lat. 2334, fol. 65v, detail. Photo courtesy of the Bibliothèque nationale de France. 148
- Figure 5-5. Evangelistenblatt (Evangelists), Aachen Gospels, 9th century. Aachen, Cathedral Treasury, Aachen Gospels, fol. 14v. © Domkapitel Aachen, photo: Ann Münchow. 153
- Figure 5-6. Ascension, Tiberius Psalter, c. 1075-1150. London, British Library, Cotton MS Tiberius C VI, fol. 15r. Photo: British Library, London, UK © British Library Board. All Rights Reserved/Bridgeman Images. 156

- Figure 5-7. God in a white cloud with red rays, Ashburnham Pentateuch. Paris, Bibliothèque nationale de France, MS nouv. acq. lat. 2334, fol. 76r, detail. Photo courtesy of the Bibliothèque nationale de France. 157
- Figure 6-1. Vespertinum Monogram, Silos Apocalypse, 11th century, Santo Domingo de Silos, Spain. London, British Library, Add MS 11695, fol. 4r. Creative Commons CCo 1.0. 168
- Figure 6-2. Vespertinum Monogram, León Antiphonary, early 10th century, León, Spain. Fol. 232r, MS. 8, Archivo de la Catedral de León. Creative Commons 4.0, CC-BY. 170
- Figure 6-3. Alpha and Maiestas Domini, St. Gregory's Moralia in Job, early 10th century, León, Spain. Fols. 1v-2r, MS 80, Biblioteca Nacional de España, Madrid. Creative Commons, CC-BY-NC-SA. 172
- Figure 6-4. Colophon and Omega, St. Gregory's Moralia in Job, early 10th century, León, Spain. Fols. 500v-501r, MS 80, Biblioteca Nacional de España, Madrid. Creative Commons, CC-BY-NC-SA. 172
- Figure 6-5. Vespertinum Monograms. a.) With St. Andrew, León Antiphonary, early 10th century, León, Spain. Archivo de la Catedral de León, MS. 8, fol. 39v. CC-BY; b) León Antiphonary, early 10th century, León, Spain. Archivo de la Catedral de León, MS. 8, fol. 76r. CC-BY; c) , Antiphonal of the Roman Liturgy, 11th century, Santo Domingo de Silos, Spain. London, British Library, Add MS 30850, fol. 112r. Creative Commons CCo 1.0; d) in the form of the Holy Family, León Antiphonary, early 10th century, León, Spain. Archivo de la Catedral de León, MS. 8, fol. 79r. CC-BY. 175
- Figure 6-6. Vespertinum Monogram, Antiphonal of the Roman Liturgy 11th century, Santo Domingo de Silos, Spain. London, British Library, Add MS 30850, fol. 206v. © British Library Board. 177
- Figure 6-7. Jasper Johns, Alphabet, 1959. paper on hardboard; 30.5 × 26.7 cm; ref. no. 2015.121. Art Institute of Chicago. © 2020 Jasper Johns / Licensed by VAGA at Artists Rights Society (ARS), NY. 179
- Figure 6-8. Decorated Letters and Vespertinum Monogram, Antiphonal of the Roman Liturgy, 11th century, Santo Domingo de Silos, Spain. London, British Library, Add MS 30850, fol. 6r. Creative Commons CCo 1.0. 181
- Figure 7-1. St. John (left) and In principio, the first words of the gospel of John (right), Reichenauer Perikopenbuch, beginning of the 11th century. Wolfenbüttel, Herzog August Bibliothek, Cod. Guelf. 84.5 Aug. 2^o, fol. 4v and 5r. Photo: courtesy Herzog August Bibliothek. 194

- Figure 7-2. Donation scene with crowning of St. Wenceslas, Wenceslas's vita, before 1006. Wolfenbüttel, Herzog August Bibliothek, Cod. Guelf. 11.2 Aug. 4^o, fol. 18v. Photo: courtesy Herzog August Bibliothek. 196
- Figure 7-3 a/b. Ob honorem Sancti Martini, written as an ornamental letter maze; original (left) and overlay with word patterns highlighted (right), Codex Albeldense, dated 976. Madrid, Biblioteca Real Monasterio San Lorenzo et de El Escorial, MS D. I. 2., fol. 19r. Photo: courtesy Patrimonio Nacional. 200
- Figure 7-4 a/b. Maurelli Abbatis Librum, written as an ornamental letter maze; original (left) and overlay with word patterns highlighted (right), Codex Albeldense, dated 976. Madrid, Biblioteca Real Monasterio San Lorenzo et de El Escorial, MS D. I. 2., fol. 19v. Photo: courtesy Patrimonio Nacional. 202
- Figure 7-5. Vigila illuminates the codex, Codex Albeldense, dated 976. Madrid, Biblioteca Real Monasterio San Lorenzo et de El Escorial, MS D. I. 2., fol. 22v. Photo: courtesy Patrimonio Nacional. 203
- Figure 7-6. Codex and lector, Codex Albeldense, dated 976. Madrid, Biblioteca Real Monasterio San Lorenzo et de El Escorial, MS D. I. 2., fol. 20v. Photo: courtesy Patrimonio Nacional. 204
- Figure 8-1. Monochrome painting and visible contours of verso image (evangelist portrait), Gospel book with lections, mid- to late 11th century, Echternach. London, British Library, MS Egerton 608, fol. 87r. By permission of The British Library. 214
- Figure 8-2. Striped painting, Gospel book with lections, mid- to late 11th century, Echternach. London, British Library, MS Egerton 608, fol. 59r. By permission of The British Library. 215
- Figure 8-3. Author portrait of the Evangelist Luke, Gospel book with lections, mid- to late 11th century, Echternach. London, British Library, MS Egerton 608, fol. 87v. By permission of The British Library. 216
- Figure 8-4. Monochrome painting and visible contours of verso image (Maiestas domini), Codex Aureus of Echternach, c. 1040, Echternach. Nürnberg, Germanisches Nationalmuseum, Hs. 156 142, fol. 2r. Image courtesy of the Germanisches Nationalmuseum. 219
- Figure 8-5. Monochrome painting and visible contours of verso image (Maiestas domini), Gospel book with lections, mid- to late 11th century, Echternach. London, British Library, MS Egerton 608, fol. 1r. By permission of The British Library. 220
- Figure 8-6. 'Curtain' page with lions, Codex Aureus of Echternach, c. 1040, Echternach. Nürnberg, Germanisches Nationalmuseum, Hs.

- 156 142, fols. 75v-76r. Image courtesy of the Germanisches Nationalmuseum. 221
- Figure 8-7. 'Curtain' page and visible contours of verso image (Maiestas domini), Gospels with canon tables, chapter lists, and lections, mid- to late 11th century, Echternach. London, British Library, MS Harley 2821, fol. 1r. By permission of The British Library. 222
- Figure 8-8. Maiestas domini, Gospel book with lections, mid- to late 11th century, Echternach. London, British Library, MS Egerton 608, fol. 1v. By permission of The British Library. 223
- Figure 9-1. Eagle/Osprey with Fish Brooch, second half of the 6th century. Gold, silver, garnet, glass, 1.9 × 3.8 × 0.9 cm. New York City, Metropolitan Museum of Art, Gift of J. Pierpont Morgan, 17.192.176. Photo: The Metropolitan Museum of Art. 246
- Figure 9-2. Raptor Brooch, c. 500-600. Gold, garnet, glass, pearl, 2.1 × 3.3 × 0.8 cm. New York City, Metropolitan Museum of Art, Gift of J. Pierpont Morgan, 17.191.165. Photo: The Metropolitan Museum of Art. 251
- Figure 10-1. Charles the Bald enthroned, Codex aureus of Charles the Bald (or 'of Saint Emmeram'), 879. Munich, Bayerische Staatsbibliothek, Clm 14000, fol. 5v. Photo courtesy of the Bayerische Staatsbibliothek. 269
- Figure 10-2. Henry II enthroned, Sacramentary of Henry II, c. 1002-1007. Munich, Bayerische Staatsbibliothek, Clm 4456, fol. 11v. Photo courtesy of the Bayerische Staatsbibliothek. 270
- Figure 10-3. A three-dimensional geometrical proof 'dissolved' into two-dimensional surfaces, Calcidius's Commentary on the Timaeus of Plato with the 'Brussels gloss', late 10th century, Koninklijke Bibliotheek van België, ms. 9625-26, fol. 13r, detail. Photo courtesy of the Koninklijke Bibliotheek van België. 275
- Figure 10-4. A picture of a cube added beside a verbal description of a cube, Boethius's On Arithmetic, 10th century. Paris, Bibliothèque nationale de France, MS lat. 6401, fol. 133v, detail. Photo courtesy of the Bibliothèque nationale de France. 276
- Figure 11-1. Arteries (L) and Bones (R), c. 1200, England. Cambridge, Gonville and Caius College MS 190/223, fols. 2v-3r. Courtesy of the Master and Fellows of Gonville and Caius College. 286
- Figure 11-2. Male Reproductive System (L) and Stomach and Internal Organs (R), c. 1200, England. Cambridge, Gonville and Caius College MS 190/223, fols. 4v-5r. Courtesy of the Master and Fellows of Gonville and Caius College. 287

- Figure 11-3. Female Reproductive System (L) and Brain and Ocular System (R), c. 1200, England. Cambridge, Gonville and Caius College MS 190/223, fols. 5v-6r. Courtesy of the Master and Fellows of Gonville and Caius College. 288
- Figure 11-4. Initial with Womb, Bartholomaeus Anglicus, De Proprietatibus rerum (in Mantuan), 1300-1309, Mantua, Italy. London, British Library, Additional MS 8785, fol. 55v. By permission of the British Library Board. 295
- Figure 11-5. Female Corpse with Seven-Celled Uterus, Guido da Vigevano, Liber notabilium Philippi septimi [sexti], Francorum regis, 1345, Paris (?). Chantilly, Bibliothèque du Château, MS 0334 (0569), fol. 281v. Wellcome Collection, CC BY 4.0. 298
- Figure 11-6. Diagrams of the Muscles, Foetal Positions in the Womb, Male Reproductive System, and Female Reproductive System (L) and 'Disease Woman' (R), The Wellcome Apocalypse, c. 1420, Germany (?). London, Wellcome Library, MS 49, fols. 37v-38r. Wellcome Collection, CC BY 1.0. 300
- Figure 12-1. Joshua ibn Gaon, Carpet page with interlaced grid design and Hebrew inscription containing Psalm 19:8-9, 1306?. Oxford, Bodleian Library, MS. Kenn. 2, fol. 14r. Photo © The Bodleian Libraries, The University of Oxford. 310
- Figure 12-2. Joshua ibn Gaon, Carpet page with interlaced grid design and Hebrew inscription containing Deuteronomy 6:24-25, 1306?. Oxford, Bodleian Library, MS. Kenn. 2., fol. 14v. Photo © The Bodleian Libraries, The University of Oxford. 311
- Figure 12-3. Joshua ibn Gaon, Carpet page with interlaced grid design, 1306?. Oxford, Bodleian Library, MS. Kenn. 2, fol. 15r. Photo © The Bodleian Libraries, The University of Oxford. 312
- Figure 12-4. Joshua ibn Gaon, Carpet page with interlaced grid design and verse count in Hebrew, 1306?. Oxford, Bodleian Library, MS. Kenn. 2, fol. 117v. Photo © The Bodleian Libraries, The University of Oxford. 313
- Figure 12-5. Joshua ibn Gaon, Carpet page with interlaced grid design, 1301-1302. Paris, Bibliothèque Nationale, Hébreu 21, fol. 265r. Photo courtesy of the Bibliothèque nationale de France. 314
- Figure 12-6. Joseph ibn Hayyim, The 'Red Heifer' in margin of bible text, The Kennicott Bible, 1476. Oxford, Bodleian Lib., MS Kenn. 1, fol. 88v. Photo © The Bodleian Libraries, The University of Oxford. 316
- Figure 13-1. Creation cupola, second quarter of 13th century, Venice, San Marco, atrium, mosaic. Photo: Branislav Slantchev. 330

- Figure 13-2. Central disk of Creation cupola (det.), second quarter of 13th century, Venice, San Marco, mosaic. Photo: Beat Brenk. 330
- Figure 13-3. Entrance to Treasury, second quarter of 13th century, Venice, San Marco, mosaic. Photo: Herbert Kessler. 333
- Figure 13-4. Expulsion and Work (det.), second quarter of 13th century, Venice, San Marco, mosaic. Photo: Beat Brenk. 335
- Figure 13-5. Pier supporting central dome, (lost) face, first half of 13th century, Venice, San Marco. Photo: Venice, Archivio Fotografico della Procuratoria di San Marco. 337
- Figure 13-6. Pacificus of Verona, Horologium nocturnum, 13th century. Venice, Biblioteca Marciana, MS Lat. VIII 22 [2760], fol. 1r. Photo: Venice, Biblioteca Marciana. 342
- Figure 13-7. Burial scene (det.), Psalter, 14th century. Besançon, Bibliothèque municipale, Ms. 140, fol. 190r. 345
- Figure 14-1. Christ in Majesty, the Godescalc Evangeliary, 781-783, Court of Charles the Great. Paris, Bibliothèque nationale de France, NAL 1203, fol. 3r. Photo courtesy of the Bibliothèque nationale de France. 356
- Figure 14-2. Figure II from Hrabanus Maurus, In Praise of the Holy Cross, 825-826/840-850, Fulda. Vaticano, Biblioteca Apostolica Vaticana, Vat. Reg. Lat. 124, fol. 9v. Previously reproduced in Charlotte Denoël, Make it New. Conversations avec l'art médiéval. Carte blanche à Jan Dibbets (Paris: BnF, 2018), p. 105. 362
- Figure 14-3. Figure 11 from Hrabanus Maurus, In Praise of the Holy Cross, 847, Mainz. Paris, Bibliothèque nationale de France, MS lat. 2422, fol. 13v. Photo courtesy of the Bibliothèque nationale de France. 364
- Figure 14-4. Sol Le Witt, Four Basic Kinds of Straight Lines and All Their Combinations in Fifteen Parts, 1969. Black ink, paper, 20.3 × 20.3 cm. Paris, collection MJS. © Sol Lewitt c/o Pictoright Amsterdam 2020. 366
- Figure 14-5. Frank Stella, Die Fahne Hoch!, 1959. 308.6 cm × 185.4 cm and the medium: enamel paint on canvas. New York, Whitney Museum of American Art. Previously reproduced in Charlotte Denoël, Make it New. Conversations avec l'art médiéval. Carte blanche à Jan Dibbets (Paris: BnF, 2018), p. 50. 367
- Figure 14-6. Franz Erhard Walther, Körper und Raum, 1967. Pencil, watercolor, paper, 29.6 × 21 cm. Fulda, FEW Foundation. Previously reproduced in Charlotte Denoël, Make it New. Conversations avec l'art médiéval. Carte blanche à Jan Dibbets (Paris: BnF, 2018), p. 99. 368

Preface: Withdrawal and Presence

Elina Gertsman

Abstract

Since Henri Focillon's eloquent meditation on la vie des formes, originally published in 1939, the subject of abstraction in medieval art has been largely reduced to the study of ornament and questions of style, with occasional forays into the discussion of sacred geometry and exploration of the late Gothic hard style. The introduction outlines major themes of this collection, which seeks to reopen the question of medieval abstractions, interrogating the term itself and asking about the ways it can be fruitfully applied to pre-modern material culture. It also provides an overview of contributions, which approach the concept of medieval abstraction from a multitude of perspectives—formal, semiotic, iconographic, material, phenomenological, epistemological.

Keywords: abstraction, terminology, theory, Haggadah, matzah

On folio 22r of the thirteenth-century Hispano-Moresque Haggadah (Bl Ms. Or 2373) a kaleidoscopic circular image splits open a page of text, its axial symmetry indicated by four pyramidal protrusions on four sides (Figure 0-1).¹ The protrusions, which dip into the text at an angle, are placed as if to suggest movement: the riotous circle—red, gold, silver, blue—seems poised to roll off the page onto the preceding folio. There, a word panel indicates the nature of the form: מצה , 'matzah', or the unleavened Passover bread (Figure 0-2).

What are we to make of this startling image? Some of its elements seem, by all measures, abstracted and abstract—at least so in their modern sense: non-representational and non-denotative, the image indexes its ostensible model only inasmuch as it echoes the round form of the actual bread. This is a matzah that is not a matzah: visually divorced from its prototype, it is semiotically trussed to it through the written word. It is a form that signals the unrepresentability of what is really at stake: no longer just an element of a Seder dinner, it is the metaphorized affliction of the Jewish people, a marker of their identity, an embodiment of their longing for divine redemption. It also is, most potently, a container for the Divine

Gertsman, E., Abstraction in Medieval Art: Beyond the Ornament. Amsterdam: Amsterdam University Press, 2020. DOI: 10.5117/9789462989894_PREF

Figure 0-1. Matzah, the Hispano-Moresque Haggadah, 1275-1324. London, British Library, Or. 2737, fol. 22r. Photo: The British Library.

Figure 0-2. 'Matzah', the Hispano-Moresque Haggadah, 1275-1324. London, British Library, Or. 2737, fol. 21v. Photo: The British Library.

Presence, what the kabbalists call the Shekhinah. The Shekhinah is a malleable vessel, void of definitive form or colour: an ever-shifting template whose shape and appearance are predicated on any given beholder's cognitive apparatus as much as on any given projection of the divine.² So it is with the Hispano-Moresque 'matzah', its interlaced form arrested in mid motion, plotting to escape both the page and the beholder's grasp. This matzah's emphatic abstraction is predicated on and brought into contrast with the figurative elements it comprehends: the four quadrupeds arranged around a floral form at the centre and a speckling of minute trifoliate plants against red and blue colour fields. It is, thus, also abstract in a very medieval sense, which sees abstraction not as the opposite of figuration but as its integral aspect.

But the language with which we describe this form is patently post-medieval: 'abstraction' as a term in its application to visual culture is a phenomenon of the recent centuries. The Latin term abstractio, at least as it is known to us from the assorted writings on perception, mathematics, noetics, and universalism, as well as through a series of reinterpretations—Boethian reinterpretations of Aristotle, Aquinian reinterpretations of Boethius—means something else entirely. What this something else is constitutes one of the central questions of the present collection, wherein nearly every essay chafes at the confines imposed by modern vocabulary on medieval works of art: ‘ornament’, ‘decoration’, ‘abstraction’, ‘geometry’, ‘non-representation’, ‘non-figuration’, ‘stylization’, ‘non-denotation’, ‘non-mimesis’, ‘subtraction’, ‘lack’ flit in and out of these papers, here reluctantly discarded, there exultantly embraced. In this way, each essay toils, on the one hand, to disentangle present-day terms from objects at hand, and, on the other, to formulate productive ways to think through and build up concepts of what medieval abstraction might and might not be, how it might be manifested, and how it might be described.

A project like this is utterly new, and yet its historiographic roots reach to the first years of the twentieth century, to Wilhelm Worringer’s Abstraktion und Einfühlung (1907; published in 1908) and Formprobleme der Gotik (1912).³ Worringer did not study medieval abstraction in any sustained way however, and neither did other luminaries of the field: not Henri Focillon in his remarkable Vie des forms (1934), which considers Romanesque painting in terms of space and/as ornament; not Ernst Gombrich in the erudite The Sense of Order (1979), where Ottonian illumination rubs shoulders with pre-Columbian sculpture.⁴ When abstraction does become a focus of a continuous inquiry, the emphasis, not surprisingly, shifts to early medieval art. The writings of Victor Elbern, for instance, focus on metalwork; eschewing the question of ornament, he had written on the aniconic and the non-figurative schemata, emphasizing particularly the form of the Cross.⁵ Jean-Claude Bonne, conversely, has dedicated a great part of his scholarship to the question of ornament, particularly in Insular illumination, and has drawn connections between medieval visual culture and modern/contemporary art.⁶ Several recent studies tug the notion of abstraction in different temporal directions, towards late antiquity on the one hand, and towards Gothic art on the other.⁷ Of course, to fully reassess the historiography of abstract forms one would have to attend to a colossal constellation of studies, ranging from those on abstraction in medieval philosophy—such as Alain de Libera’s L’art des généralités—to those on abstraction in modern and contemporary visual culture: a patent impossibility within the scope of this unavoidably brief preface.⁸ Instead, in order to avoid being reductively selective here, I asked contributors to this volume to bring up and reassess as needed key studies in abstraction immediately relevant to their own essays.

The resultant historiographic mosaic proves to be instructive, as from the very start the authors were given a wide-ranging brief: to approach the concept of medieval abstraction from a multitude of perspectives—formal, semiotic, iconographic, material, phenomenological, epistemological. This brief was framed by a still broader set of questions. Abstraction haunts medieval art, both withdrawing figuration and suggesting elusive presence. How does it make or destroy meaning in the process? Is it by detaching itself from matter and foregrounding the figurative?

Is it by dissolving the figurative into matter, by calling attention to the surface and to its planar artifice? Do the figurative and the abstract collapse upon each other? In what way does abstraction represent or deny? Does abstraction suggest the failure of figuration, the faltering of iconography, and can it truly escape the semiotics of colour or form? Does medieval abstraction function because it is imperfect, incomplete, and uncorrected—and is therefore cognitively, visually demanding? Is it, conversely, precisely about perfection? Just how closely are medieval abstraction and vision connected, and to what extent is the abstract predicated on theorization of the unrepresentable and imperceptible? Is there something intrinsic about the connection between abstraction and the divine? How much can the abstract really comprehend and elide with the aniconic? Does medieval abstraction pit aesthetics against metaphysics? How, finally, does it define its viewers, medieval and modern?

The Hispano-Moresque matzah image raises three broad themes—abstraction as the untethering of image from what it purports to represent, abstraction as a vehicle for signification, and abstraction as a form of figuration—and it is these themes that give general shape to the present book. Its first part is concerned with shifting dissemblance that simultaneously denies and invites abstraction as signification. Because later medieval painting is often framed as the demise of Hiberno-Saxon abstract forms in anticipation of early modern ‘naturalism’, I wanted to open this book with a set of essays that tackle largely later medieval art, although the groundwork here is laid by Vincent Debiais’s chapter, which looks at the uses of plain colour in manuscripts and wall paintings created between the ninth and the twelfth centuries. Debiais parses our notions of the ‘figure’ and the ‘monochrome’, provocatively positing colour not as a sign for something else but rather as the very subject of the image under scrutiny—a notion heretofore limited to the discussion of modern and contemporary colour-field painting. The necessity to step away from the modern conception of abstractions is confirmed in Aden Kumler’s essay that explores the so-called reticulated grounds in Gothic illumination. Kumler focuses specifically on a framed, apparently aniconic, miniature in an early fifteenth-century copy of Guillaume de Deguileville’s Pèlerinage de l’âme, to argue that in eschewing narrative figuration, the image functions as an exemplar and a vehicle of an explicitly medieval concept of abstraction, here in relation to Trinitarian ontology.

This exceptional ontology can be no more comprehended than the divine essence of the unknowable God, communicated in the Kennicott Bible, as Adam S. Cohen and Linda Safran argue in their essay. The illuminator of this late medieval Jewish Iberian manuscript, Joseph ibn Hayyim, confronts the ineffability of seeing, reading, and grasping the biblical text through the device of abstraction, which mutates throughout the book, scattering itself across full-page compositions and side panels, the binding and the paste-downs. Abstraction, Cohen and Safran suggest, offers access to the indescribable God through order, beauty, and, above all, infinity. This infinity, and the unknowability of the divine, are, finally, the subject of Robert Mills's essay, which explores Hieronymus Bosch's Visions of the Hereafter panels, concentrating specifically on their non-figurative backs. Generally considered to imitate stony surfaces, these paintings, Mills contends, are emphatically unlike stone: their dissemblance from what they purport to represent indexes the notion of dissimilitudo between divine substance and phenomenological, sensible corporeality. Like the plain-colour surfaces discussed by Debiais, these panels call attention to their own thingness, to the liquescence of their pigment; like the evacuated image in the Pèlerinage de l'âme and the complex mazes in the Kennicott Bible, they ask that we look through, with, and ultimately beyond the threshold of the sensible.

All four essays in the first part of the book make clear that abstraction, built as it is on the slippage between signification and aporia, is predicated on figuration. The role of figuration in the semiotics of the abstract stands at the core of the second part of the volume, which looks at the way that abstraction intervenes in figurable reality as a form and a sign. Here we take a chronological step back in order to look at early medieval manuscripts that have historically been seen as hospitable grounds to abstraction of form. Danny Smith's essay explores the seventh-century Ashburnham Pentateuch, zeroing in on four patches of pink paint variously applied over the first and the second person of God. Like Mills, who evokes Jackson Pollock's drip canvasses to structure his argument about the materiality of Bosch's paint, Smith looks to the language of Barnett Newman's ideographic paintings to articulate the abstraction of the Godhead as the painterly matter of Creation itself. In turn, Benjamin Tilghman borrows from Jasper Johns to explore the semiotic instability of Vespertinum monograms, which oscillate between abstraction and figuration. Just as contributors to the first part of the volume worry the question of unrepresentability by focusing on the disjunction between image and prototype, Tilghman locates abstraction in the tension (and, ultimately, divorce) between lettering and its content.

This tension is also explored in Gia Toussaint's essay that takes, however, a different approach to the complex relationship between writing and figuration. Toussaint studies three distinct cases of what she calls 'abstract ornamentation', and posits it as both a formal and a semiotic vehicle for meaning-making. Abstraction, for Toussaint, is thus a complex union of script and ornament, activated by the artist as well as the reader-viewer. This activation—evident especially in two tenth-century carmina figurata letter mazes—is similarly the predicate of viewing practices explored by Nancy Thebaut. Thebaut looks at several eleventh-century evangeliaries produced at Echternach, which unite and juxtapose monochrome or skeuomorphic paintings on one side of the folio with figural paintings on their obverse. In examining such ‘monochromes’, Thebaut returns to some of the issues brought up by Debiais in his contribution, while her focus on the materiality of paint on these folios establishes a dialogue with Smith’s essay. She nonetheless arrives at a different aspect of abstraction, finding an analogy between the semiological transformation of colour fields across the folios and the ontology of the Eucharist itself predicated on transformation.

If the first two parts of the book focused on essential ontological questions that tied abstraction, one way or another, to the celestial plane, the last section turns towards the natural world and to the human pursuits that define abstraction in epistemic terms, at turns poetic, at turns ecological, at turns scientific, and oftentimes fallible. The chronological range of the four essays here is less restricted, comprehending the temporal span of the first eight contributions. Danielle Joyner examines two sixth-century bird-shaped Frankish brooches as a succession of abstractions that here mean removals and withdrawals. Guided as much by Gallic poetry as by eco-critical approaches, Joyner suggests that jewelled pieces include ornithological and environmental abstractions—that is, abstraction of visual elements from real birds, and abstraction of stones and metals from the earth, as well as subsequent abstraction of animal form from these natural elements. The concept of abstraction as removal and withdrawal similarly governs Megan McNamee’s essay, which considers devotional images through the lens of mathematical treatises. McNamee turns to eleventh-century codices to problematize their planarity, framing it by contemporaneous discourses on geometry and optics: abstraction—here reduction and withdrawal of solid forms—is used as a pictorial strategy of divergence between what it is possible to clearly describe / imagine / see and what it is possible to represent.

A similar kind of divergence is addressed in Taylor McCall’s piece on late medieval anatomical diagrams, which turned to abstraction of form—what she defines as a disassociation between the idea and its figuration—as a vehicle for communicating hidden physiologies. Both McNamee and McCall ultimately see abstraction as an example of failure of figuration to show what cannot be shown. The same is finally true for Harris’s essay, which explores a fourteenth-century Hebrew Bible illuminated by Joshua ibn Gaon, where, however, even abstraction falters, serving as it does as an index and a sign of human fallibility in the face of divine perfection. Like McNamee’s flat cubes and McCall’s geometricized organs, the full-page abstractions on the pages of ibn Gaon’s Bible are purposefully flawed—flawed as a way to show the failure to represent what is ultimately unrepresentable. In suggesting painting as an analogy for an impossible ontology, Harris’s essay circles back to the issues tackled in the first part of the book: those of unrepresentability and dissemblance.

Discussions of unrepresentability (of the divine) and fallibility (of human sight) similarly, and not surprisingly, govern Herbert Kessler’s response to the collection at hand. This penultimate essay focuses on the first cupola in the atrium of San Marco in Venice, but reaches broadly to comprehend the rich variety of topics brought up by other authors: the relationships between abstraction and figuration, abstraction and imagination, abstraction and materiality, abstraction and mathematics, abstraction and ineffability, abstraction and imperfection, abstraction and perception. Kessler's response explores the San Marco cupola within a categorically medieval framework, calling up Honorius Augustodunensis in the epigraph, and carefully parsing sources from Pope Innocent III to Albertus Magnus and from Gerald of Wales to Pacificus of Verona.

Still, even though the contributors to this volume aspire to study medieval abstraction on its own terms, they must, perforce, have recourse to present-day vocabularies and present-day definitions of the abstract. In fact, the shared visual vocabularies of images separated by many centuries have given rise, in the last decade, to a multitude of studies that ask whether medieval art is modern and whether modern art is medieval.⁹ While these questions are emphatically not the point of this book, several authors—notably Debiais, Mills, Smith, and Tilghman—evoke modern and contemporary art practices to set up their arguments. In order to give methodological shape to these evocations, this book's coda, written by Charlotte Denoël, explores a complex set of affinities between medieval and contemporary art. In her essay, Denoël creates purposefully a-chronic conduits between Carolingian manuscripts and twentieth-century minimalist and conceptual art, to shed light on their visual and epistemological kinship. Denoël's coda thus serves as a fitting conclusion to the book: it does not close the subject of medieval abstraction but rather opens it anew.

The range of this book might be broad, but still, to many, it will not be broad enough: essays here focus on abstraction specifically in the medieval art of Judaeo-Christian Europe, created between the sixth and the sixteenth centuries. This scope is predicated by what I see as shared ontological, theological, and epistemological concerns evidenced in the material culture that is delimited by fairly specific temporal and environmental geographies. It is not, as I write this, a fashionable position to take, at a time when we are acutely aware of the fraught history of our field that has long privileged Western medieval art.¹⁰ To that end, a word on these geographical limitations is needed. When I originally conceived of this volume and began conversations with colleagues and friends, I was pelleted with ideas: what about Almohad ornament? Byzantine gold ground? Buddhist aniconism? After a while, as I was jotting down notes, I became uncomfortably reminded of the famous fable that all of us Soviet children learned in school: Elephant paints a landscape and, before sending it out to the exhibition, invites friends to come and look at it. Everyone likes the painting but finds something missing: Crocodile wonders where the Nile is, Seal wishes for ice and snow, and Pig longs for acorns. Elephant picks up his paintbrush and adds all these elements, and then some (a pot of honey, just in case Bear is in the audience). Once finished, Elephant gathers his friends again, and they proclaim, quite justly, that the painting is an utter mess.¹¹

Still, because of my long-standing commitment and scholarly sympathy to global medieval study, I cast a wide call for papers, gathering essays on Buddhist, Christian (both Western medieval and Byzantine), Islamic, Jewish, and Hindu art. When I began the editing process, however, it became abundantly clear that in my wish to be inclusive, I was doing the volume a disservice. The set of research questions I set out to explore was watered down, transformed into a cluster of case studies that pricked the surface of these questions; where many essays (included here) cohered beautifully, some seemed to stand on their own and therefore appeared definitively othered. All edited volumes, to some extent, present a congeries of sorts, but what I had on my hands was Elephant's mess that tried both my scholarly and moral principles. The volume had to be transformed, its focus tightened, its cultural bounds redrawn; certain essays had to go, others had to be commissioned. The majority of those writers I had to leave behind saw perfectly my quandary and generously endorsed my decision. I am as grateful to them as I am to the authors whose essays I did include, and who bore my convolutions of conscience—which remade the volume nearly from scratch and therefore took a fair amount of time—with patience and encouragement. Perhaps this book will serve as an impetus for another volume on the subject, one with a global focus. After all, in my experience, the project of medieval abstraction is not unlike the impossible matzah of the Hispano-Moresque Haggadah: rich, colourful, kaleidoscopic, it keeps expanding and turning, seemingly without end.

Scholastics talked about abstraction as an intellectual process that allows one to strip facts and phenomena of their specifics, and move from the sensorial observation to an ontological understanding of the universe. In putting together this volume, I borrow from their playbook: I hope that the sum total of this collection will allow the reader to isolate the multivalent meanings of 'medieval abstraction' from every given essay and put them together in order to move from specifics—reticulated Gothic ground, a geometricized bird, a figureless monochrome—to something rather more general, more universal, and therefore, dare I say, rather more abstract.

Notes

1. The Hispano-Moresque Haggadah (BL ms. Or 2737) is a Sephardic haggadah for Passover according to the Spanish rite, created between 1275 and 1324. On the manuscript, see Margoliouth, Catalogue of the Hebrew and Samaritan Manuscripts, vol. 4, no. 609; Metzger, 'Two Fragments of a Spanish XIVth Century Haggadah', pp. 25–34; Narkiss, Hebrew Illuminated Manuscripts, vol.1, no. 9; vol. 2, figs. 79–104; Metzger and Metzger, Jewish Life in the Middle Ages, p. 304; Zirlin, 'The Schocken Italian Haggadah', pp. 63–72; Gutmann, 'The Sacrifice of Isaac in Medieval Jewish Art', pp. 74, 85; Harris, 'Love in the Land of Goshen', pp. 161–80; Kogman-Appel, Jewish Book Art, pp. 94–95; Tahan, Hebrew Manuscripts, pp. 90–93; and Sacred: Books of the Three Faiths, p. 160
 On the matzah, see especially Batterman, 'Bread of Affliction, Emblem of Power' as well as Batterman, 'The Emergence of the Spanish Illuminated Haggadah Manuscript'. On movement in medieval Jewish manuscripts, see Epstein, 'Thought Crimes: Implied Ensuing Motion in Manuscripts Made for Jewish Patrons', pp. 84–86.
2. Sefer ha-Zohar, 95a-b, in The Wisdom of the Zohar, vol. 3, pp. 1314–16. On the matzah image in Sephardic haggadot as the Shekhinah, see Batterman, 'Bread of Affliction, Emblem of Power', pp. 62–67. Batterman connects this shifting form to the varied forms of the abstracted matzah, found in various manuscripts (pp. 64–67), but stresses, however, what he sees as an association between the form of the matzah, Christian imagery, and, more specifically, the form and appearance of the Eucharistic host. See Hecker, Mystical Bodies, Mystical Meals, especially Chapter 6, on dining rituals as 'augmentation theurgy'.
3. Worringer, Abstraktion und Einfühlung and Formprobleme der Gotik.
4. Focillon, Vie des forms, Chapter 2; Gombrich, The Sense of Order.
5. Elbern, 'Anciconica, arte' and 'Bildstruktur – Sinnzeichen – Bildaussage'.
6. See, e.g. Bonne, 'Art ornemental, art environnemental'; 'De l'ornemental dans l'art médiéval (VIIe-XIIe siècle)'; 'L'ornement – la différence dans la répétition'; 'Ornementation et représentation'; and 'Une certaine couleur des idées'.
7. For the former, see essays in Envisioning Worlds in Late Antique Art, ed. Olovsson; for the latter, e.g., Powell, 'Late Gothic Abstractions'; Rau, Die ornamentalen Hintergründe; and Beyer, 'Unding Ornament?'.
8. From Alain de Libera's L'art des généralités to, e.g., Goodman's 'Abstraction', Damsch's, 'Remarks on Abstraction', and Elger's Abstract Art (2017).
9. Betancourt and Taroutina, eds., Byzantium/Modernism; Nagel, Medieval / Modern; Powell, Depositions; Prado Villar, 'Silentium', pp. 21–43.
10. On what Christina Normore calls 'external pressures to produce a field of medieval global art', see the introduction to her edited volume, Reassessing the Global Turn in Medieval Art History, p. 3.
11. Sergei Mikhalkov, 'Elephant Painter' [Слон-живописец], <http://basni.net/basnya/slon-givopisets.html>, accessed 3 November 2019.

Works Cited

- Abstraction before the Age of Abstract Art*, <https://preabstract.hypotheses.org/>, accessed 3 November 2019.
- Michael Batterman, 'Bread of Affliction, Emblem of Power: The Passover Matzah in Haggadah Manuscripts from Christian Spain', Imagining the Self, Imagining the Other, ed. by Eva Frojmovic (Leiden: Brill, 2002), pp. 53–89.
- , 'The Emergence of the Spanish Illuminated Haggadah Manuscript', Ph.D. Dissertation (Northwestern University: 2000).
- Roland Betancourt and Maria Taroutina, eds., Byzantium/Modernism: The Byzantine as Method in Modernity (Leiden: Brill, 2015).
- Vera Beyer, 'Unding Ornament? Abgebildete Vorhänge zwischen Ornament und Figur in der niederländischen Malerei des 15. Jahrhunderts', in Ornament: Motiv – Modus – Bild, ed. by Vera Beyer and Christian Spies (Munich: Fink, 2012), pp. 27–56, at pp. 39–42.
- Jean-Claude Bonne, 'Art ornemental, art environnemental: au-delà ou en-deçà de l'image (art médiéval, art contemporain)', Images Re-vues, 10 (2012), <https://journals.openedition.org/imagesrevues/2262> (accessed 25 July 2020).
- , 'De l'ornemental dans l'art médiéval (VIIe-XIIe siècle): le modèle insulaire', in L'image: Fonctions et usages des images dans l'Occident médiéval: Actes du 6e International Workshop on Medieval Societies, Centro Ettore Majorana (Erice, Sicile, 17-23 octobre 1992), ed. by Jérôme Baschet and Jean Claude Schmitt, Cahiers du Léopard d'Or, 5 (Paris: Le Léopard d'Or, 1996), pp. 207–49.
- , 'L'ornement – la différence dans la répétition', in La variation, ed. by Christophe Carraud (Orléans: I.A.V., Association des conférences, 1998), pp. 81–99.
- , 'Ornementation et représentation', in Les Images dans l'Occident médiéval, ed. by Jérôme Baschet and Pierre-Olivier Dittmar, L'atelier du médiéviste, 14 (Turnhout: Brepols, 2015), pp. 199–212.
- , "'Une certaine couleur des idées" Matisse et l'art médiéval', in Les moyen âge de l'art contemporain, ed. by Jean-Philippe Antoine, Cahiers de la Villa Gillet, 17 (Lyon: La fosse aux ours, 2003), pp. 49–84.
- Hubert Damisch, 'Remarks on Abstraction', October, 127 (2009), pp. 133–54.
- Alain de Libera, L'art des généralités: Théories de l'abstraction (Paris: Aubier, 1999).
- Victor H. Elbern, 'Anciconica, arte', in Enciclopedia dell'arte medievale, ed. by Angiola Maria Romanini and Marina Righetti, 12 vols. (Rome: Istituto della Enciclopedia italiana, 1991), p. i, pp. 789–97.
- , 'Bildstruktur – Sinnzeichen – Bildaussage: Zusammenfassende Studie zur unfigürlichen Ikonographie im frühen Mittelalter', Arte medievale, 1 (1983), pp. 17–37.
- Marc Michael Epstein, 'Thought Crimes: Implied Ensuing Motion in Manuscripts Made for Jewish Patrons', in Manuscripta Illuminata: Approaches to Understanding Medieval and

- Renaissance Manuscripts*, ed. by Colum Hourihane (Princeton: Princeton University Press/Index of Christian Art, 2014), pp. 69–86.
- Henri Focillon, Vie des formes (Paris: Presses universitaires de France, 1934).
- Ernst Gombrich, The Sense of Order: A Study in the Psychology of Decorative Art (New York: Phaidon, 1979, rpt. 2012).
- Nelson Goodman, 'Abstraction', in Oxford Art Online (Oxford: Oxford University Press, 2003).
- Joseph Gutmann, 'The Sacrifice of Isaac in Medieval Jewish Art', Artibus et Historiae, 8 (1987), pp. 67–89.
- Julie Harris, 'Love in the Land of Goshen: Haggadah, History, and the Making of BL MS Or. 2737', Gesta, 52, no. 2 (2013), pp. 161–80.
- Joel Hecker, Mystical Bodies, Mystical Meals: Eating and Embodiment in Medieval Kabbala (Detroit: Wayne State University Press, 2005).
- Katrin Kogman-Appel, Jewish Book Art Between Islam and Christianity: The Decoration of Hebrew Bibles in Medieval Spain (Leiden: Brill, 2004).
- George Margoliouth, Catalogue of the Hebrew and Samaritan Manuscripts in the British Museum, 4 vols. (London: British Museum, 1899–1935; vols. I–III, repr. 1965).
- Mendel Metzger, 'Two Fragments of a Spanish XIVth Century Haggadah', Gesta, 6 (1967), pp. 25–34.
- Therese Metzger and Mendel Metzger, Jewish Life in the Middle Ages: Illuminated Hebrew Manuscripts of the Thirteenth to the Sixteenth Centuries (New York: Alpine Fine Arts Collection, 1982).
- Sergei Mikhalkov, 'Elephant the Painter' [Слон-живописец], <http://basni.net/basnya/slon-givopisets.html> (accessed 3 November 2019).
- Alexander Nagel, Medieval / Modern: Art Out of Time (New York: Thames & Hudson, 2012).
- Bezalel Narkiss, Hebrew Illuminated Manuscripts in the British Isles: a Catalogue Raisonné. The Spanish and Portuguese Manuscripts, 2 vols. (Oxford: Oxford University Press, 1982), I, no. 9; II, figs. 79–104.
- Christina Normore, ed., Reassessing the Global Turn in Medieval Art History (Amsterdam: Amsterdam University Press, 2018).
- Cecilia Olovsson, ed., Envisioning Worlds in Late Antique Art: New Perspectives on Abstraction and Symbolism in Late-Roman and Early-Byzantine Visual Culture (c. 300-600) (Berlin: De Gruyter, 2019).
- Amy Knight Powell, Depositions: Scenes from the Late Medieval Church and the Modern Museum (Boston: MIT Press, 2012).
- , 'Late Gothic Abstractions', Gesta, 51 (2012), pp. 71–88.
- Francisco Prado-Vilar, 'Silentium: el silencio cósmico como imagen en la Edad Media y la Modernidad', Revista de poética medieval, 27 (2013), pp. 21–43.
- Bernd Rau, Die ornamentalen Hintergründe in der französischen gotischen Buchmalerei (Stuttgart: Verlag Cantz, 1975).

Sefer ha-Zohar in The Wisdom of the Zohar: An Anthology of Texts, ed. by Isaiah Tishby, 3 vols. (Oxford: Oxford University Press for Littman Library, 1989), vol. 3.

Ilana Tahan, Hebrew Manuscripts: The Power of Script and Image (London: British Library, 2007).

Wilhelm Worringer, Abstraktion und Einfühlung: ein Beitrag zur Stilpsychologie (Munich: R. Piper, 1908).

———, Formprobleme der Gotik (Munich: R. Piper, 1912).

Yael Zirlin, 'The Schocken Italian Haggadah of c. 1400 and Its Origins', Jewish Art, 12/13 (1986/1987), pp. 54–72.

About the Author

Elina Gertsman is Professor of Medieval Art and Archbishop Paul J. Hallinan Professor in Catholic Studies II at Case Western Reserve University. She is the author of The Dance of Death in the Middle Ages: Image, Text, Performance (2010), Worlds Within: Opening the Medieval Shrine Madonna (2015), and The Absent Image: Lacunae in Medieval Books (2021); co-author of The Middle Ages in 50 Objects (2018); and editor of several volumes on performance, emotion, liminality, and animated objects. Her work has been supported by the Guggenheim, Kress, Mellon, and Franco-American Cultural Exchange Foundations as well as by the American Council for Learned Societies.

