1 Scholarly Reviews

AUP books are rightfully and regularly reviewed in several key subject journals. We have good relationships and a substantial contact-base with journals, but your connections and preferences will help to complement this.

Please list below ten relevant scholarly journals which accept reviews and publish reviews, complete with the name/email of the book reviews editor or editor-in-chief.

In accordance with journal practices, we do not send unsolicited review copies as many journals cannot accept these. For this reason, we will first contact the journal with book information and invite them to request a review copy.

Where hardcopies are requested by journals/reviewers, we always endeavour to try to send these. However, in some cases, circumstances beyond control might affect our ability to do so. Please refer to our review copy policy for up-to-date information: <https://www.aup.nl/en/academic/resources-for-reviewers>.

One of the most effective ways to promote your book is through social media. We are committed to connecting with our authors online, as well as with universities, societies, journals, and other publishers, furthering our mission to ensure your work reaches the international scholarly community online and offline.

If you haven't already, we highly recommend that you join the Twitter community. It is a key platform for academics, universities, journals and other research bodies to connect, exchange knowledge, and create collaborative opportunities within your research area.

4 Conferences and Events

The ongoing COVID-19 pandemic continues to affect the organisation and running of conferences and events across the world. Most major subject conferences now occur online or in a hybrid-format and are offering digital packages to publishers, including ‘virtual tables’ and landing pages on their chosen platform.

If there are any conferences you plan to attend, please list the dates and organiser’s websites in the table below. In consultation with our commissioning editors, we will plan our level of involvement in the conference accordingly.
