THE NORVAL FOUNDATION, CAPE TOWN

Mention Cape Town as a travel hot spot, and people are likely to think of wine-country tours and the famed Table Mountain. But developments over the past year suggest its name should also call to mind art galleries and design studios. In fall 2017, the tubular Zeitz Museum of Contemporary Art Africa opened, crafted from a historic grain-silo complex, and the city was also named a UNESCO City of Design. This spring, the Norval Foundation launched; the site, designed by DHK Architects, boasts a stark building home to exhibitions on 20th- and 21st-century South African artists, a gorgeous sculpture garden, and the Skotnes Restaurant (named for South African artist Cecil Skotnes). There is no better way to experience Norval than as part of Cape Town's Art, Culture, and Design Experience, organized by the company Roar Africa, which plans luxurious personalized journeys across the continent. Says Roar founder Deborah Calmeyer, a native of Zimbabwe: "Cape Town's creative scene has been brewing and bubbling for years, and its time has now come" (norvalfoundation.org). —Vanessa Lawrence
