Spring is just around the corner, which means it's harvest time in the southern hemisphere. The southern hemisphere mirrors the condition of the northern, except that the optimal latitudes for viticulture pass mostly through open ocean. However, Chile and Argentina are one of three exceptions and are important winegrape producing regions along with South Africa and Australia/New Zealand.

South America's largest wine growing country is Argentina and is famous for Malbec. Argentina's newer regions include Patagonia, which creates exceptional Pinot Noir. For now the primary export market is Malbec, but their Cabernets easily compete with Napa. Chile produces peppery and earthy Cabernet Sauvignon in a style very similar to Bordeaux. The country champions a red variety called Carmenere, which has flavors similar to Cabernet Franc. Find out what makes these wine countries unique!
