About Chongli

Winter Olympic Legacy · Passionate Chongli

Chongli came to global attention through snow and ice sports and became a venue for the snow events of the Beijing 2022 Olympic Winter Games. Located in north-western Hebei Province, Chongli covers 2,334 square kilometres and administers two towns, eight townships, 211 administrative villages and 406 natural villages, with a total population of approximately 129,000. It has received more than 40 national honours, including designation as a National Tourist Resort and one of China's first national ski tourism resorts.

Exceptional Natural Resources

Chongli's success is rooted in two major natural advantages. First is its location. Chongli lies at the “golden latitude” of 41° north, where many of the world's best-known ski destinations are concentrated. Its distinctive mountain landforms and geographical position create a local environment and microclimate different from neighbouring areas. Average annual precipitation is 465.2 mm, and the snow season lasts more than 150 days. The average winter temperature is -12.1°C, with an average wind force of level 2. Mountain slopes are generally between 5° and 35°, with a maximum vertical drop of 800 m. Chinese and international experts have described Chongli as “one of the most suitable areas in China for developing the ski industry”. Its second major advantage is its ecology. Chongli has 2.5085 million mu of forest land and a forest coverage rate of 71.53%. Its annual average PM2.5 concentration remains at 12 µg/m³, while the annual average concentration of negative oxygen ions reaches 10,000 per cubic centimetre. It is known as the “Forest Sea West of Beijing” and a “Natural Oxygen Bar”. The average summer temperature is only 18.4°C, and Chongli was selected as a “Preferred Summer Tourism Destination 2023”. Visitors can enjoy cool 18°C summer weather, breathe fresh air and take in landscapes of forests, fields and flowers.

Comprehensive Facilities and High-Quality Services

Chongli has convenient transport links to other regions. It is 150 km from Beijing in a straight line and has two high-speed railway stations; the shortest journey from Beijing to Chongli is under one hour. The 158 km Beijing-Chongli Expressway takes approximately two hours. Chongli is also only 50 km from Zhangjiakou Airport. Together, these links form an integrated transport network and place Chongli within the “one-hour Beijing transport circle”. Its infrastructure is advanced. The urban area has an electricity supply capacity of 780,000 kVA, a daily water supply capacity of 62,000 m³, a daily sewage treatment capacity of 25,000 m³ and gas storage capacity of 700,000 m³. Chongli is also connected to Zhangjiakou’s dedicated international internet data channel, and its existing infrastructure is designed to remain sufficient for at least the next 20 years. Visitor services are comprehensive. Chongli has 55 star-rated hotels, including six five-star hotels, and has introduced internationally recognised hotel brands such as Hyatt, InterContinental and Element. The district can accommodate 30,000 guests at one time. Taizicheng Ice and Snow Town covers 2.89 million m² and includes three major clusters: a cultural and creative retail street, a convention and exhibition centre, and the State Guest Villa, forming a multi-functional tourism service complex. The world’s first four-season outlet centre themed around snow and ice has signed up to the development, with more than 80 flagship stores. A total of 182 well-known restaurant brands from across China have also opened in Chongli. Local specialities such as Chongli fried cakes and oat noodles offer visitors an authentic taste of the district.
