

New Jersey

Estimates of the scale and scope of child sexual abuse and exploitation (CSAE) in the United States (U.S.) are deeply concerning. According to the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC), at least one-in-four girls and one-in-20 boys will experience sexual abuse during childhood.<sup>1</sup> Beyond the human toll, the financial impacts of CSAE are also substantial: the total economic burden of child sexual abuse in the U.S. was estimated to exceed $9 billion in 2015, including costs related to health care, child welfare services and lost productivity.<sup>2</sup>

Yet progress is possible. Evidence-based interventions can prevent sexual violence and reduce harm to survivors and their families when it does occur.<sup>3,4,5</sup> The United States Out of the Shadows Index (the index)—developed by Economist Impact with support from World Childhood Foundation USA—was created to spotlight state action, and inaction, to tackle CSAE. Drawing on more than 170 metrics, the index assesses how effectively states are adopting essential prevention and response measures and where urgent improvements are still needed.

Overview

New Jersey has made meaningful progress in addressing CSAE, reflected in its overall ranking of fourth on the index. Nonetheless, further action is needed to strengthen prevention infrastructure and expand pathways for survivors to access justice and long-term support.

State spotlights

- In 2019, New Jersey enacted a Sexual Assault Victim's Bill of Rights, establishing core protections for survivors, including access to information on financial compensation and civil protective orders.<sup>6</sup>
- In 2018, New Jersey became the second state to ban child marriage without exception.<sup>7</sup>
- New Jersey requires all law enforcement officers to complete training every three years on investigating and responding to sexual assault. County prosecutors and assistant prosecutors assigned to such cases must also undergo recurring training, which includes instruction on the value of restorative justice in sexual assault cases.<sup>8</sup>

Priority areas for future focus

- Strengthen the legal framework against sexual violence by ensuring that anti-grooming legislation explicitly criminalizes engaging in a pattern of behavior intended to facilitate or lead to the sexual abuse of a child.
- Boost prevention capacity through:
- Developing a statewide CSAE prevention plan or strategy, encompassing both in-person and online abuse and exploitation;
  - Conducting a comprehensive study to assess the scale and scope of CSAE;<sup>9</sup> and
  - Mandating regular training on child sexual abuse for employees of youth-serving organizations outside the school setting, to equip them with the skills to recognize and respond to abuse.<sup>10</sup>

Guarantee that children have access to the highest-quality services by providing adequate funding for Children's Advocacy Centers.<sup>11</sup>

Support survivors' access to justice and compensation by:

- Eliminating both the criminal statute of limitations and the civil statute of limitations for all CSAE crimes; and
- Reforming the state's eligibility requirements for Crime Victim Compensation to ensure children and survivors of sexual crimes are not excluded or penalized due to age, reporting delays or other barriers.<sup>12</sup>

The findings reflect the most recent available data at the time the research was conducted. Research for the pilot states was completed in 2022/23, for the second iteration states in 2023/24, and for the remaining states and the District of Columbia in 2024/25. For more details, see the methodology report.

The Issue Spotlights figure features a limited sample of the data included in the index. For the full set of indicators and a detailed explanation of the scoring, sources and weightings, please see the project's methodology report and interactive model.

9. The New Jersey Student Health Survey, administered as part of the CDC's Youth Risk Behavior Surveillance System, includes limited questions on childhood sexual violence. However, its scope is restricted to public high school students, excluding key populations such as those in private schools, homeschooling environments, and juvenile detention facilities—resulting in critical data gaps that hinder a comprehensive understanding of the issue statewide.
10. New Jersey requires mandated reporter training for employees of some youth-serving organizations; however, comprehensive training on identifying, preventing and responding to child sexual abuse is not required.
11. Children's Advocacy Centers (CACs) are organizations located throughout the US that help facilitate a multidisciplinary and child-centered response to CSAE. These centers bring together several of the key actors—law enforcement, child protective services investigators, medical and mental health professionals, forensic interviewers, victim advocates, and more—under one roof, helping to minimize the number of times a child has to be interviewed and offering critical therapeutic and other support to children and their families.
12. Key barriers to accessing victim compensation include short timeframes for when an application can be filed and/or requiring a police report as a condition for eligibility.

Symbols

- † This reflects whether the state has a statute explicitly mandating this requirement.
- ‡ This data, which is integrated into the index, was sourced from CHILD USA.
- * This reflects whether the state has established a clear statutory definition of "sexual consent" that includes reference to consent being "freely" or "voluntarily" given.
- ** This reflects whether the state has established a statutory minimum legal age for marriage of 18, without exceptions such as parental consent, judicial approval, or pregnancy-related allowances.
- § This reflects whether the state has an anti-grooming law that explicitly defines or describes grooming (or a similar term) as a pattern of behaviors intended to build trust with a child to facilitate sexual abuse. Laws that solely address isolated acts such as luring or enticing a minor—without recognizing the broader behavioral pattern—were not considered. To meet the criterion, laws must explicitly cover in-person grooming, not just online interactions.
- §§ This reflects whether sex education is required by law or through state standards that have the force of law. This data, which is integrated into the index, was sourced from SIECUS.
- ¶ This data, which is integrated into the index, was sourced from Enough Abuse and is current as of October 2024.
- # "No" refers to states whose statutes establishing eligibility criteria for Crime Victim Compensation impose a strict deadline to apply, based solely on the date of the crime or its report to law enforcement, with no explicit exceptions for children or victims of sexual abuse. "Partially" applies to states with vague or discretionary exceptions (e.g., "good cause") or that allow minor victims a fixed time beyond age 18 to apply (e.g., until 21 or 25). "Fully" applies to states that impose no time limit on applications from victims who were minors at the time of the crime and/or were victims of sexual abuse.
- ## "No" refers to states whose statutes establishing eligibility criteria for Crime Victim Compensation require victims to report the crime to law enforcement, with no exceptions for children or victims of sexual assault. "Partially" applies to states that allow some exemptions to the law enforcement reporting requirement for minors or victims of sexual assault, but those exemptions are time-bound, narrow, or vaguely defined (e.g., based on "good cause" without clear standards). "Fully" applies to states that provide various, clearly defined alternatives to reporting to law enforcement — or impose no reporting requirement at all — for minors or victims of sexual assault.
