Estimates of the scale and scope of child sexual abuse and exploitation (CSAE) in the United States (U.S.) are deeply concerning. According to the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC), at least one-in-four girls and one-in-20 boys will experience sexual abuse during childhood.<sup>1</sup> Beyond the human toll, the financial impacts of CSAE are also substantial: the total economic burden of child sexual abuse in the U.S. was estimated to exceed $9 billion in 2015, including costs related to health care, child welfare services and lost productivity.<sup>2</sup>

Yet progress is possible. Evidence-based interventions can prevent sexual violence and reduce harm to survivors and their families when it does occur.<sup>3,4,5</sup> The United States Out of the Shadows Index (the index)—developed by Economist Impact with support from World Childhood Foundation USA—was created to spotlight state action, and inaction, to tackle CSAE. Drawing on more than 170 metrics, the index assesses how effectively states are adopting essential prevention and response measures and where urgent improvements are still needed.

Overview

Idaho has made notable progress in addressing CSAE, including collecting key criminal justice data on such cases. However, further action is needed to strengthen prevention efforts and to ensure that all survivors have access to trauma-informed, child-centered response systems.

State spotlights

- In April 2025, the Idaho State Legislature approved a one-time appropriation of $3 million to supplement funding for Children's Advocacy Centers (CACs), strengthening services for children affected by abuse.<sup>6,7</sup>
- The Idaho Attorney General and Governor are required to prepare an annual report on child sexual abuse prosecutions, including data on charges filed, outcomes and sentencing.<sup>8</sup>

Priority areas for future focus

Strengthen the legal framework against sexual violence by:

- Raising the minimum legal age of marriage to 18 without exceptions;
- Eliminating marital exceptions or defenses to age-based sex offense laws; and
- Explicitly criminalizing sexual misconduct by persons in positions of trust or authority in relation to children under 18 years of age.

Boost prevention capacity through

- the development of a statewide CSAE prevention plan or strategy, encompassing both in-person and online abuse and exploitation. Actions should include:
- Requiring age-appropriate and evidence-based child sexual abuse prevention education for students;
  - Requiring school-based online safety education for students that includes instruction on identifying, avoiding and reporting online sexual harms, including the risks of producing and sharing explicit self-generated content;
  - Mandating regular training on child sexual abuse for school personnel and employees of other youth-serving organizations to help them recognize and respond to abuse; and
  - Requiring schools to engage parents and caregivers on child sexual abuse prevention for students.

Promote a child-centered and trauma-informed response by:

- Ensuring adequate funding for CACs to meet service standards and demand;
- Mandating recurring training on sexual violence and trauma-informed practice for key responders, including prosecutors; and
- Adopting measures to prevent the retraumatization of victims during legal proceedings, applicable to all children up to the age of 18.<sup>9</sup>

Support survivors' access to justice and compensation by:

- Eliminating both the criminal statute of limitations and the civil statute of limitations for all CSAE crimes; and
- Reforming the state's eligibility requirements for Crime Victim Compensation to ensure children and survivors of sexual crimes are not excluded or penalized due to age, reporting delays or other barriers.<sup>10</sup>

The findings reflect the most recent available data at the time the research was conducted. Research for the pilot states was completed in 2022/23, for the second iteration states in 2023/24, and for the remaining states and the District of Columbia in 2024/25. For more details, see the methodology report.

The Issue Spotlights figure features a limited sample of the data included in the index. For the full set of indicators and a detailed explanation of the scoring, sources and weightings, please see the project's methodology report and interactive model.

6. Children's Advocacy Centers (CACs) operate across the U.S. to coordinate a multidisciplinary, child-centered response to CSAE. By co-locating law enforcement, child protection, medical and mental health professionals, and victim advocates, CACs reduce repeated interviews and provide essential therapeutic and support services to affected children and families.

9. Testimonial aids are designed to protect children who have experienced sexual abuse from further trauma during judicial proceedings. These measures may include allowing child survivors to provide testimony through alternative means—such as closed-circuit television or prerecorded statements—instead of live, in-court testimony. Additionally, many jurisdictions recognize a child sexual abuse–specific hearsay exception, which permits the admission of non-testimonial out-of-court statements, provided the statements meet established standards of reliability and admissibility under applicable evidentiary rules.
10. Key barriers to accessing victim compensation include short timeframes for when an application can be filed and/or requiring a police report as a condition for eligibility.

Symbols

- † This reflects whether the state has a statute explicitly mandating this requirement.
- ‡ This data, which is integrated into the index, was sourced from CHILD USA.
- * This reflects whether the state has established a clear statutory definition of "sexual consent" that includes reference to consent being "freely" or "voluntarily" given.
- ** This reflects whether the state has established a statutory minimum legal age for marriage of 18, without exceptions such as parental consent, judicial approval, or pregnancy-related allowances.
- § This reflects whether the state has an anti-grooming law that explicitly defines or describes grooming (or a similar term) as a pattern of behaviors intended to build trust with a child to facilitate sexual abuse. Laws that solely address isolated acts such as luring or enticing a minor—without recognizing the broader behavioral pattern—were not considered. To meet the criterion, laws must explicitly cover in-person grooming, not just online interactions.
- §§ This reflects whether sex education is required by law or through state standards that have the force of law. This data, which is integrated into the index, was sourced from SIECUS.
- ¶ This data, which is integrated into the index, was sourced from Enough Abuse and is current as of October 2024.
- # "No" refers to states whose statutes establishing eligibility criteria for Crime Victim Compensation impose a strict deadline to apply, based solely on the date of the crime or its report to law enforcement, with no explicit exceptions for children or victims of sexual abuse. "Partially" applies to states with vague or discretionary exceptions (e.g., "good cause") or that allow minor victims a fixed time beyond age 18 to apply (e.g., until 21 or 25). "Fully" applies to states that impose no time limit on applications from victims who were minors at the time of the crime and/or were victims of sexual abuse.
- ## "No" refers to states whose statutes establishing eligibility criteria for Crime Victim Compensation require victims to report the crime to law enforcement, with no exceptions for children or victims of sexual assault. "Partially" applies to states that allow some exemptions to the law enforcement reporting requirement for minors or victims of sexual assault, but those exemptions are time-bound, narrow, or vaguely defined (e.g., based on "good cause" without clear standards). "Fully" applies to states that provide various, clearly defined alternatives to reporting to law enforcement — or impose no reporting requirement at all — for minors or victims of sexual assault.
