

BREAKING BARRIERS: LIGHTING CHINA'S PATH TO GLOBAL MARKETS

In recent months, China has found itself at odds with the European Union and the United States over its designation as a non-market economy. As Beijing challenges the policies of its most important trading partners, there is increasing concern that this dispute will hamper global economic growth. With that in mind, this infographic provides a snapshot of the key EU and US requirements to reverse its position on China. In spite of Chinese declarations to the contrary, it has yet to fulfill any of these conditions.

Genuine financial sector

Strong corporate governance rules for companies

Chinese government ownership of means of production

Chinese government control over enterprises

Effective legal framework for free-market economy

Convertibility of RMB

Foreign company access to joint ventures

Collective bargaining for workers

Market-based operation of private economy
