Saw Palmetto

The active ingredient in saw palmetto, beta-sitosterol, has been studied extensively for its ability to support healthy prostate function. Research suggests it works by blocking the conversion of testosterone into dihydrotestosterone (DHT), which can lead to an enlarged prostate if produced in excess.

A large study of more than 2,100 men showed that taking saw palmetto extract daily greatly improved BPH symptoms when compared with those taking a placebo or no treatment at all.

Further investigation into its effects on urinary frequency revealed it can reduce nighttime trips to the bathroom by up to 11%. Other studies suggest that saw palmetto may reduce levels of free testosterone which prevents the formation of DHT and ultimately leads to better symptom control of BPH overall.

Gorilla Cherry

Gorilla Cherry is a plant-based superfood grown in Africa that has become increasingly popular due to its numerous health benefits it provides.

Numerous studies have already been conducted studying the effects Gorilla Cherry has on improving prostate health. One notable study by Arizona State University showed that individuals taking Gorilla Cherry had an improved prostate specific antigen (PSA) level after eight weeks.

Pumpkin Seed Extract

Research suggests that pumpkin seed extract may work to promote prostate health by inhibiting the growth of cells in the prostate gland and improving urinary function. Several scientific studies have demonstrated positive outcomes from regular supplementation with this natural treatment.

A study published in 2012 reported that dietary supplementation with pumpkin seed oil significantly improved levels of both total testosterone and 5-alpha reductase activity.

In this study, pumpkin seed oil was found to inhibit this enzyme activity and improve symptom severity among those taking it regularly for four weeks.

Boron

Boron is a trace mineral found naturally in soil, fruits, vegetables, nuts, and legumes. It is essential for bone metabolism in mammals; however, past research has shown that boron might also have multiple biological roles beyond bone metabolism which have yet to be fully understood.

Research suggests that boron suppresses tumor necrosis factor (TNF)- α production in macrophages. TNF- α is an important cytokine produced by immune cells that can influence inflammation as well as normal cellular growth processes.

Lycopene

Lycopene is a carotenoid, an organic pigment found primarily in red-pigmented fruits.

Studies suggest that a higher dietary intake of lycopene may protect against certain types of cancers including prostate cancer. In addition, research shows that elevated levels of lycopene can reduce cell growth markers by interfering with their signaling pathways.
