

What is SDA?

Specialist Disability Accommodation (SDA) is a house, apartment or other type of home that has been designed for people who need a lot of support.

SDA includes special features that help people live as independently as possible.

Depending on who it is designed for, an SDA property might have wide doorways, a hoist in the bedroom or bathroom, strong walls and windows that won't get damaged easily, or special technology.

Some SDA properties have around-the-clock on call support. This means that someone is available to help if you need support quickly – like if the battery in your wheelchair stops working or you need some other type of support.

If you have really high support needs or your disability makes it hard to live in housing that most people live in, then SDA might be right for you.

Housing Hub is a website that shows accessible properties that are available to rent or buy. You can create a profile on the Housing Hub and it will show you places to live that match what you want.

If you have very high disability support needs, the Housing Hub team may be able to support you to work out what you want and need in a home. See the services available here: housinghub.org.au/resources/article/specialist-services
