

AFTERSHOCKS

Photographs of Haiti by Nadia Shira Cohen

A car serves as a home in a makeshift tent camp in Port-au-Prince's Savane Pistache neighborhood. Many Savane Pistache residents are saving money in order to move back to the countryside.

Nadia Shira Cohen is a photographer based in Rome.

A woman departs Port-au-Prince, carrying only a few belongings, on a bus headed to Les Cayes.
A building in Jacmel lies in ruins, with only its balcony pillars intact.

The house of Ronald Joanel, in Savane Pistache, has been taken over by pigeons ever since he took his family to live in an unfinished one-room house in Miragoâne, a town in the countryside.

A fire burns the remains of a bed in the ruins of a Savane Pistache house where nine people died.

Laundry drying in a graveyard in Les Cayes.

The remains of a rocking chair amid ruins in Jacmel, a region that serves as a haven for Haitians migrating back from Port-au-Prince.

A man sleeps in a church taken over by locals as living quarters in Savane Pistache. Thirty family members, most of whom recently migrated to Les Cayes from Port-au-Prince, share this damaged one-room house, sleeping on the floor inside and the ground outside.