Survey Showcasing Karen Kilimnik's Decades-Long Engagement with Diverse Media Opens at Gladstone Gallery

Exhibition highlights rarely seen works from the late 1980s onward

Gladstone Gallery presents an exhibition of works by Karen Kilimnik from the late 1980s onward, following the gallery's presentation of new paintings earlier this year. Surveying Kilimnik's career-long devotion to diverse media, the exhibition attests to both her central role in the revitalization of painting, as well as to her masterful and genre-transgressing impulse to negate the distance between personal, art historical, and cultural archives. The exhibition is on view September 26 through December 13 at Gladstone's 64th Street location in New York.

Karen Kilimnik has been a singular and expansive force in contemporary art for more than four decades. From dioramas to mise-en-scène, painted portraits and landscapes, to video, Kilimnik has constructed an immersive and interconnected world, a vision that offers us passage into the environs of our shared cultural fantasies. Her constellation of titles and her rich visual vocabulary reveal a body of work that is both personal and conceptual. Kilimnik's works of this period seem to confer her complex perspective on the notion of public image, moving between the grandeur of European history and iconography of the contemporary day.

The exhibition will feature rarely seen works including the single-channel video Heathers (1992–93), as well as paintings such as Mary Calling up a Storm (1996) and poor little beggars (2008), featured in the artist's 2006 exhibition at the Musée d'Art Moderne de la Ville de Paris. Reflecting Kilimnik's pioneering role in constructing environments and sculptures in dialogue with her paintings, works such as Eau de Joy (2005) an artificial bird's nest incorporating audio and olfactory elements, underscore the breadth and innovation of her practice.
