 - Shawn Carolan of Menlo Ventures will join the board with this investment
- Chime intends to use this additional funding to further scale the business
 - The Company intends to not only expand its headcount and marketing efforts, but also the types of products and features offered
- According to TechCrunch Chime may have several deals in the pipeline, which will see the bank working more directly with employers

Transaction Commentary

"I started this company because Green Dot was really focused on the unbanked and under-banked people who couldn't get bank accounts because they had bad credit or bad checks – that sort of thing. It was really not a full-featured bank account. And so what I wanted to do with this company was create a product that would serve more mainstream consumers – people who actually had accounts at [Bank of America] and Wells Fargo, but just aren't particularly satisfied with those guys for variety of reasons – probably first, and foremost, the way they structure the products are quite punitive... We think the next phase for us is going to be helping our members manage their credit and loans more effectively. We think we can play a role in providing short-term lines of credit and helping members manage their debt."*

Chris Britt
Co-Founder, CEO

"The bank account is at the center of our lives, critical to both financial and emotional well-being. We love how Chime's business growth aligns with helping more members save more money for themselves rather than being gouged by hidden bank fees. This business model shift in financial services is inevitable and Chime is leading the way."
