Transaction Summary

Transaction Summary

- On January 8, 2019, Plaid announced that it has acquired its competitor Quovo – which delivers a similar service, but with a focus on wealth management and brokerage data – for $200 million
- New York-based Quovo offers investment, insurance, and loan account coverage; its platform is used by a broad spectrum of firms including Betterment, Wealthfront, SoFi, Stifel, Vanguard, Empower Retirement, and John Hancock
- Plaid believes the acquisition will make it easier for developers to build products that incorporate investment and brokerage data
- Quovo has raised a total of $20 million in financing; Quovo's investors include Portag3 Ventures, IGM Financial, F-Prime Capital, Napier Park Financial, Salesforce Ventures, FinTech Collective and Long Light Capital
- This acquisition follows shortly after Plaid raised $250 million in its Series C round led by Kleiner Perkins (see FT Partners' profile on this transaction here)
  - New investors Andreessen Horowitz, Index Ventures, Norwest Venture Partners, and Coatue Management participated in Plaid's recent round
  - Existing investors Goldman Sachs, NEA and Spark Capital also joined the round
- The latest financing round valued Plaid at $2.65 billion according to TechCrunch (3)
  - Plaid has raised approximately $310 million in cumulative financing

Transaction Commentary

"As we enter 2019, we want to fully enable a digitallydelivered financial system—one that gives consumers convenience and control across their financial assets." (1)

"Together, we'll build a single platform that developers and large companies alike can use to build any financial application — from payments to lending to wealth management." (2)

Zach Perret Chief Executive Officer, Co-Founder

"We've known about Quovo for a long time and had been admiring them from afar. As we started to look at the market going forward, a big goal was to empower a full financial picture for the user — this builds towards that vision." (2)

William Hockey Chief Technology Officer, Co-Founder
