

FINANCIAL TIMES

The first investments sound exciting. One, says Hargreaves Lansdown, is “Arqit, a British quantum technology encryption start-up constellation of ‘quantum key distribution’ satellites that use lasers to transmit unhackable . . . encryption keys” and which “has unicorn status with a valuation of more than $1bn, following its reverse merger via a Spac [special purpose acquisition company] with Centricus Acquisition Corp.”