

CLIENT SUCCESS STORY

How a lifesaving organization keeps its employees healthy

The American Heart Association (AHA) has been helping improve people's health for nearly a century. With offices in all 50 states, the flexibility and convenience of virtual care help keep its 3,000 employees mentally and physically fit for a lower cost.

The Challenge

As a self-insured employer, it is important for the AHA to ethically keep claims costs low. Providing easier access to high-quality healthcare through virtual care helps reduce the use of costly urgent care and ER visits. In 2019, with an increased focus on mental health, the AHA expanded its virtual care offering to include mental health services at no additional cost for most employees.

Our Approach

Partner

- Provide the latest information and online resources to be hosted on a site available to all employees
- Work closely together to set up a successful series of educational webinars

Promote

- Engage employees through various communications programs throughout the year
- Leverage open enrollment and new-hire orientations to educate employees about virtual care

“People have become dependent on this virtual benefit. We have had so much positive feedback that we know we will always have this option available.”

Bryn Seay, benefits manager, American Heart Association

Extending virtual care to everyone, regardless of plan

When the leaders of the AHA discovered the true value of Teladoc Health's virtual care—convenience, quality, and 24/7 access to U.S. board-certified doctors—they knew it wasn't enough to only offer it to those enrolled in one of the association's traditional plans.
