FOMC Briefing Fuels Rate Cut Hope

- Crypto markets were broadly down driven by post-Fed price action in the US session: the slight derisking left majors down with $BTC at $64.5k and $ETH at $3.2k.
- While Fed day on paper went down fairly as expected - with Chair Powell reaffirming the Central Bank's policy of being data-dependant - odds of Fed cuts this year edged higher.
- The Grayscale Bitcoin Mini Trust with ticker $BTC, a spin-off from Grayscale's original $GBTC, began trading. It notably has the lowest fee of all such products, at 0.15%.
- During the last 24 hours, the top three gainers were $ATH, $KAS, and $BEAM, while the top three losers were $DOG, $AIOZ and $POPCAT.

FOMC Briefing Fuels Rate Cut Hope

The Powell's overnight comments seemed intended to prepare the market for Sep. rate cut. Consider "[a rate cut] could be on the table as soon as the next meeting," "job gains have moderated (changed from 'remained strong')," "...attentive to the risks to both sides of its dual mandate." The last quote is particularly important, as it implies the Fed is now more focused on the recent job market trends. And rightly so, as it is slowing faster than the Fed anticipated, evident in the June unemployment already hitting the Fed's 4% median yr-end projection. BTC was left behind the post-FOMC risk asset rally, likely due to BTC-specific factors (e.g. DOJ's BTC sale FUD, the dud over July cut hope). Expect a catch-up however as we approach the next key Fed event, namely the Jackson Hole meeting later this month.
