- Markets edged lower in a quiet session with no dominant catalyst. As of now, $BTC is trading at $103,046 and $ETH at $3,417, with Bitcoin dominance at 60.13%.
- A House committee is reviewing a Senate-passed bill to reopen the government after a 42-day shutdown, with a full House vote expected tomorrow. The bill would restore key services and pay federal workers but excludes Democrats' push for extended health subsidies, as tensions rise over flight disruptions and political blame.
- A few other headlines include: Perp DEX Lighter raises $68M at a $1.5B valuation, Coinbase calls off $2 billion deal for stablecoin startup BVNK, and China accuses the U.S. of stealing $13 billion in bitcoin hack.
- During the last 24 hours, the top three gainers were $FTN, $TIBIR, and $MERL, while the top three losers were $XPL, $ZEC, and $UNI.

Fear Dominates Crypto While Coinbase and Uniswap Spark Optimism

Sentiment-wise, 2025 is turning out to be a year of despair, according to the CoinMarketCap Crypto Fear & Greed Index. The index has spent more than double the days in the Fear zone compared to Greed so far this year. Liquidations, over-exposure to altcoins, and macro concerns probably explain this, but for those able to zoom out and look beyond the next paycheck, there's still plenty to get excited about in this industry. Such encouragement arrived yesterday with Coinbase's relaunch of its ICO platform for U.S. residents and Uniswap's proposal for a fee switch. Both developments offer fresh evidence that the SEC's "Project Crypto" vision is materializing: Chair Atkins stated that "most crypto assets are not securities" (removing a key bottleneck for the fee switch) and aims to "bring crypto asset distribution back to America." Serious builders and investors, not those chasing quick pump-and-dump schemes (the very few), are well-advised to review Atkins's July 31 speech for a sense of where the industry is headed in the next few years. Or, better yet, read Presto's Project Crypto: A Catalyst For Fee Switch Trade?.
