- The SEC and CFTC clarified that most digital assets—especially decentralized or utility-driven tokens—are not securities and may fall under commodities, signaling a more flexible stance. - A few other headlines include: GSR expanding its token advisory business with $57M in acquisitions, Phantom receiving CFTC approval to access regulated derivatives markets, and Mastercard set to acquire BVNK for up to $1.8B in the largest stablecoin deal to date.
- During the last 24 hours, the top three gainers were $SIREN, $BAN, and $M, while the top three losers were $GRASS, $PI, and $H.

Hyperliquid Gets TradFi Attention, PURR Only DAT in Profit

Hyperliquid was covered by Fortune, WSJ and Bloomberg in the same week, with focus on its 24/7 trading and growing relevance beyond crypto-native markets. The positioning is shifting from perp DEX to broader market infrastructure. That backdrop is showing up clearly in the DAT space. After the DAT launch frenzy and “hype” of last year, Hyperliquid Strategies ($PURR) is currently the only DAT in profit, while the rest of the cohort remains underwater after recent launches (see attached chart). The company deployed ~$129.5MM into ~5.0MM HYPE and is now up ~$78MM on those purchases. Total holdings stand at ~18.2MM HYPE, worth >$750MM. In practice, performance across DATs has been driven almost entirely by underlying token strength, with HYPE the only asset in this group that has delivered.
