Founding Story

Isaac Oates founded Justworks to create a world in which starting, running, and joining a growing business is an accessible option for all.

In 2012, Isaac found himself frustrated by paperwork, exorbitant costs, and endless hours spent on administration instead of his team. It wasn't the first time he had felt this way — at his first startup Adtuitive, hiring, payroll, and the constant administrative distractions of running a business stifled the parts of entrepreneurship and building a business that he loved.

After Etsy acquired his first startup, Adtuitive, in 2009, Isaac led their HR and payments group, where he worked extensively with remote and distributed teams, as well as freelance and part-time employees. He knew he couldn't be the only one wishing for a better way to take care of his team, so in 2012 he left Etsy to build Justworks. Today, whether it's for 2 or 200 employees, entrepreneurs and growing businesses across all 50 U.S. states use Justworks to work fearlessly, pursue their passion, and do more of what matters.

In 2012, Isaac Oates found himself frustrated by paperwork, exorbitant costs, and endless hours spent on administration instead of his team.

It wasn't the first time he'd felt this way — Isaac knew firsthand that entrepreneurs face challenges of all shapes and sizes. At Adtuitive, his first startup, his vision felt clear but the time he spent on hiring, payroll, and compliance paperwork kept him from pursuing it to the fullest day-in, day-out.

After Etsy acquired Adtuitive in 2009, Isaac led Etsy's HR and payments group, where he worked extensively with remote and distributed teams, as well as freelance and part-time employees. Again, he felt the constant administrative distraction stifling his and his team's full potential — there had to be a better way.

Workplaces were evolving. The needs of entrepreneurs, growing businesses, and employees had become more complicated, but the infrastructure to support them hadn't kept up. While the internet had made many things easier, even people at internet businesses were still hunching over fax machines to hire and pay their team, not to mention struggling to understand complex payroll tax and compliance requirements. Isaac knew he couldn't be the only one wishing for a better way, so in 2012 he left Etsy to build one.

From his early career as a payments engineer at Amazon to his 12 years of service as an intelligence officer in the Army Reserve, Isaac's technical experience and intuition for leading and preparing teams for any scenario were a perfect match for founding Justworks. To disrupt the "back office," he recognized the need to create an entirely new platform — a seamless fusion of software and service delivery built to put people first.

By building Justworks' tech from the ground up, Isaac ensured the company owned every aspect of the employer and employee experience across benefits, payroll, HR tools, and compliance support. Plus, as a Professional Employer Organization (PEO), Justworks could handle the tedious and complicated work of filing, reporting, and procuring the correct insurance policies for growing businesses and their teams.

Simple? Not quite.

Many before Justworks had tried, but no one had figured out a truly worry-free way to support modern entrepreneurs. These are people who believe good software is something that everyone should have and that it should do everything. They expect a platform and service delivery that is reliable, always improving, and easy to use. When it comes to problems, they communicate on their terms and want someone to respond right away, not weeks later.

Historically, these high expectations had proven an impossible fit for HR technology.

From the beginning, Isaac focused on solving the technology challenges of legacy providers while also recognizing the merit of their compliance focus. Justworks spent years becoming a licensed provider in every state before it even launched. Five years on, marrying strict regulatory adherence with simple and friendly software has proven to be a winning combination. With no need for customers to deal with a brokerage or rely on multiple points of contact for support, Justworks makes the incredibly complex parts of running a businesses easier and more fun to navigate.

Today, whether they have 2 or 200 employees, entrepreneurs and growing businesses across all 50 U.S. states use Justworks to work fearlessly, pursue their passion, and do more of what matters.
