

Overview

Nasdaq requires that all Distributors of Nasdaq information submit usage reports monthly. The usage reports must list the total number of Subscribers and Data Feed Recipients who had potential access to Nasdaq data during the reporting period, unless the Distributor is able to technically track actual usage for each Subscriber. Unless otherwise noted, a reporting/service month begins on the first day of a calendar month and ends on the last day of the same calendar month.

Distributors are required to report at least one Subscriber for each Nasdaq data product received (regardless of any technical or administrative use waiver).

Reporting Requirements
Internal Distributors	Internal Distributors are required to submit a Monthly Summary Usage Report that includes the total number of Subscribers with the potential to access the information, unless the Distributor is able to technically track actual usage for each Subscriber.

Late & Revised

- Distributors must submit reporting to Nasdaq no later than 15 days after the end of the applicable service period.
- Distributors are limited to 2 months (from the due date of the original report) to revise or correct their usage reporting.
- Nasdaq invoices Distributors based on the last month of reported usage. If a Distributor does not submit a usage report prior to the due date, the prior month's invoiced usage will be used to invoice for the current month.
- Nasdaq rolls forward the last usage report received until the usage report is updated within the guidelines.
- The due date is extended to the next business day if the due date coincides with a market holiday or weekend. Nasdaq will not provide a Distributor with back credits for original or revised reporting received after the end of the due date.
- Nasdaq will alert Distributors via email for late usage reporting. All communications will be sent to the reporter's email. Nasdaq reserves the right to terminate a Distributor's agreement with Nasdaq for delinquent reporting. This policy does not limit a Distributor's liability to Nasdaq for under-reporting usage.

Election to Persist Reporting Usage for Fee Capped Products

Distributors that distribute products that are reportable but expect their usage to be greater than the minimum required for the highest tier for the foreseeable future may elect to notify Nasdaq that they will be at the highest tier indefinitely. Distributors electing to do so, must notify Nasdaq in writing if their usage drops below highest tier and then may commence self-reporting.
