

A guide to getting the most out of your recycling collection

Workplace recycling is now law in Wales

This guide on the amount of recycling and waste typically created by different businesses is to help you to work out the recycling and waste needs of your workplace.

It is important to understand the amount of each recycling stream and waste you produce so you have the right containers and collection frequencies, and a waste and recycling service that meets your needs.

If your bins regularly overflow or are half full, talk to your waste collector about changing your arrangements. This could reduce the number of bins you need, reduce your costs and optimise collections.

Remember to consider what could affect how much waste you generate, for example, tourist season, Christmas holidays, or changes in staffing levels.

Your waste collector should be able to give you information on other bin sizes available or you may wish to get quotes from a few different collectors.

The Code of Practice provides all the detail about how to comply with the new law (www.gov.wales/workplacerecycling)

Glass 11%

Food waste 9%

Non-recyclable waste
34%

The proportions of material taking up space in the bin of a typical restaurant.

The new Workplace Recycling Regulations are now law and all workplaces across Wales must comply with the new requirements. This 'Bin Guide' will assist you to work out your requirements for recycling and waste containers once your materials are separated out from each other.

A conversation with your waste collector about your requirements for your new collection is strongly recommended.

An average licensed restaurant producing approximately 2 large trade bins of material each week might adopt a collection profile as set below:

	Containers	Frequency	Label
Cardboard & paper		Collected weekly Space-constrained businesses may be able to set cardboard out in bundles - check with your collector
Plastic, cartons & metal		Collected weekly A single 360 litre bin may be sufficient in some cases
Glass		Collected weekly Avoid filling to the top to prevent breakages
Food waste		Collected weekly Many collectors apply a fill-level limit as these bins are heavy when full
Non-recyclable waste		Collected weekly
