

Eye Drops from CVS, Target & More Recall Oct. 30, 2023

Oct. 30: The FDA has recalled certain over-the-counter eye drops from brands like CVS Health, Leader, Rugby, Rite Aid, Target Up & Up, and Velocity Pharma, due to potential bacterial contamination that could cause serious eye infections or severely impair vision. Even though the FDA hasn't heard about anyone getting an eye infection from these products yet, they still want to exercise caution.

It's the second eye drops recall in 2023; we saw one for Ezricare brand drops in January 2023.

Products affected: The recall includes 26 over-the-counter eye drop products under these brands (view the full list):

- CVS Health
- Leader (Cardinal Health)

- Rugby (Cardinal Health)
- Rite Aid
- Target Up & Up
- Velocity Pharma

What to do if you have the products: If you have any of these eye drops, don't use them! Toss them in the trash or take them back where you bought them for a refund. If your eyes feel weird or hurt after using them, talk to your doctor or get medical help right away.
