

SECOND to learn

PROVIDING EVERY STUDENT
WITH AN OPPORTUNITY TO GIVE

Community colleges play an integral part in educating and developing students to succeed by providing them with the guidance and opportunity to learn, explore, and become responsible individuals ready to face real-world challenges. They also serve a larger purpose of instilling moral values in students – to give back to the community and help people in need.

In recognition of this effort to educate students both morally and intellectually, SECOND to Learn, a vRetta Foundation initiative, was established to provide college students with the opportunity to support needy children who are not as privileged and who cannot afford educational resources to pursue basic studies. For every textbook that is sold to a college student, one needy child in a developing or underdeveloped country receives free educational resources for one year. In other words, when a student purchases a textbook, there is a second person who benefits and learns. In addition to their academic growth, students also learn a second set of values which includes a moral responsibility to serve the community and ensure advancement of people in the world.

To create a sense of belonging and an ongoing desire to serve the community, each student will be provided with the contact details of the child they are supporting. Students are encouraged to contact the child they are sponsoring, share stories, provide moral support and work towards building a world community. Children feel cared for and confident when they learn that there are young people from around the world who are taking initiative to support them. College students become role models for these children.
