DJILBA (August–September)

Djilba, the season of Conception shows a transitional period with a mix of cold, warm, rainy, and windy days. Traditional Aboriginal life adapted to these changes, continuing to rely on land-based animals like yongar (kangaroo), waitj (emu), and koomal (possum) as primary food sources. Djilba's name reflects the arrival of baby animals and the protective behaviour of birds like koolbardi, djidi djidi (willy wag tails), and wattle birds.

KAMBARANG (October–November)

Kambarang, the season of Birth marks its arrival with rising temperatures, wattles, banksias, kangaroo paw, orchids and leschenaultias that have erupted into bloom. Animals wake from hibernation, and you're likely to meet bobtail lizards and baby magpies. Kambarang showcases a variety of rich colours, with the dramatic moodjar, or native christmas tree, displaying bright orange and yellow flowers.

Recognising Noongar Seasons' environmental and cultural significance deepens our connection to the land, traditional practices, and community celebrations in Armadale, Western Australia.
