TropiSlim: The Science Behind It

The "Menopause Parasite" discusses the difficulties women have with weight gain after menopause, a normal stage of life characterized by the cessation of monthly periods as a result of lower hormone production. Hormonal changes that cause a slowed metabolism, muscle mass loss, higher insulin resistance, and increased hunger are the reasons behind this weight gain. Menopause, increased visceral fat, and reduced energy expenditure have been linked in clinical research, as reported in Climacteric and the International Journal of Obesity.
