What does VidaCalm really contain?

Take a look at what goes into making VidaCalm.

Oat Straw

In herbal medicine, oat straw is used to soothe the nervous system and reduce stress.

The high silica content is responsible for its ability to improve ear functions. Silica, a mineral essential to the growth and maintenance connective tissues throughout the body including the ears, is an essential mineral. The connective tissue in the ear is stronger and healthier when it comes to transferring sound waves from the ear to the brain. This results in better hearing.

Oat straw, in addition to its high silica content is believed to also improve blood circulation to the ears.

Bacopa

Bacopa grows on mud shores and in wetland areas. The active ingredient, bacosides is believed to enhance cognitive function by increasing nerve transmission and decreasing oxidative stress within the brain.

It increases blood flow in the inner ear which is vital for proper ear functioning. It is essential that the cochlea (a spiral-shaped inner ear structure responsible for hearing) receives a constant flow of oxygen and nutrients in order to function properly.

Bacopa can improve blood flow in the inner ear, ensuring that the cochlea gets the oxygen and nutrients it needs to function properly.

GABA

GABA (gamma aminobutyric acid) is a natural neurotransmitter produced by the human brain. It regulates brain activity and promotes relaxation.

It modulates the activity of the neurons in the brainstem which are responsible for the processing of sound. GABA is an inhibitory transmitter, meaning that it can reduce the activity of neurons in the brainstem which interferes with our ability hear.

Mucuna Pruriens

Dopamine is one of the main active ingredients found in Mucuna Pruriens. Dopamine, a neurotransmitter, plays an important role in the brain's reward and pleasure centres. It also plays a role in regulating emotional and movement responses.

L-Dopa is another important active ingredient found in Mucuna Pruriens. L-Dopa, which is a precursor of dopamine and is converted to dopamine by the brain, is an important active ingredient in Mucuna Pruriens. L-

Dopa, like dopamine has neuroprotective properties that can prevent hearing loss.

Rhodiola

Rosavin is the most active ingredient in Rhodiola. It is known to have anti-inflammatory qualities, which can reduce inflammation and improve hearing.

Hearing problems can be caused by ear inflammation, such as tinnitus or sensorineural loss.
