Meet George H.W. Bush

Serving as President of the United States was just one of many interesting things that George H.W. Bush accomplished in his life. Few American leaders have had a more impressive resume. He held many important positions in government, such as ambassador and Vice President of the United States, before moving into the White House. Throughout his career, he was respected for his honor and integrity.

Bush came from an important and wealthy family that strongly believed in serving others. He believed in this so much that he fought for his country in World War II as a pilot for the Navy. Bush became a war hero when he survived getting shot down by the enemy.

After the war, he became a successful businessman and eventually entered politics. His top priority, however, was his family. He and his wife Barbara had six children. Their oldest son, George W. Bush, would also become President of the United States.

When George H.W. Bush was president, the world changed dramatically. The long Cold War between America and the Soviet Union ended and people looked forward to an era of peace. Bush led the country through several new, unexpected challenges. Although Bush was not re-elected by the American people as president, they continued to admire him for being a man of character and wisdom.

Young George

George Herbert Walker Bush came from a hardworking, successful family. Both of his grandfathers were wealthy businessmen and his father, Prescott, was a well-known U.S. senator from Connecticut. George had four siblings and he was the second oldest.

George was a very good athlete and student in school. He played baseball, basketball, and soccer, and his fellow students elected him senior class president.

War Hero

When America entered World War II, George joined the military at the age of 18, becoming the youngest pilot in the U.S. Navy. He flew 58 missions in the Pacific as a torpedo bomber. The flights were often dangerous and during one mission in 1944, the enemy shot down his plane, killing two of his crewmates. George parachuted out of the plane into the ocean and was rescued by an American submarine. The military later awarded him several medals for bravery. Afterwards, George thought more about his relationship with God and often wondered, "Why had I been spared and what did God have for me?"

A Long Rise to Power

In 1945, not long after he returned home, he married a woman named Barbara Pierce. They would eventually have six children, George W., Robin, John (nicknamed Jeb), Neil, Marvin, and Dorothy. Sadly, Robin died of leukemia when she was just three years old. George and Barbara were both heartbroken but gave each other support after she died.

George enrolled in Yale, the same university his father attended, and graduated with a bachelor's degree in 1948. Just like before, George was an excellent athlete at Yale. He was captain and the first baseman of the baseball team and even played in two College World Series. He also got to meet Babe Ruth, one of the greatest baseball players of all time.

Bush and his family moved to Texas, where he became a businessman in the oil industry. After his father became a U.S. senator from Connecticut, Bush decided to follow his footsteps and enter politics. He, like his father, was a Republican, and was elected to the U.S. House of Representatives in 1966.

During the 1970s, presidents Richard Nixon and Gerald Ford recognized his abilities and appointed him to several positions in their administration, such as Ambassador to the United Nations, chief diplomat to China, and Director of the Central Intelligence Agency. These positions gave Bush a lot of knowledge about America's foreign policy.

Bush felt that, with all of this experience, he might be a good president, so he ran in the 1980 presidential election. He first had to win the Republican Party's nomination to be their candidate for president, but he lost to California Governor Ronald Reagan. Although Bush lost, Reagan chose him to be his vice presidential running mate. In November 1980, the American people elected Reagan and Bush in a landslide.

Quote

"A new breeze is blowing, and a nation refreshed
by freedom stands ready to push on."

- Inaugural Address,
January 1989

Vice President

George H.W. Bush was now vice president of the United States. He worked well with President Reagan and was very loyal to him. The country enjoyed great prosperity under their leadership. For many years, America had been fighting a Cold War against the Soviet Union, which was a dictatorship. Reagan and Bush fought hard to stop it from spreading communism around the world. Thanks to their efforts, Soviet leaders began to abandon communism and allow freedom for their people.

By 1988, Reagan was planning to leave the White House. Bush ran for president promising to continue Reagan's policies. The American people were happy with the way things were going, so they elected Bush.

President

During Bush's presidency, the Soviet Union collapsed and changed back to its previous name, Russia. Freedom was spreading there and to many other countries. People hoped this would make the world more peaceful. Bush helped the leaders of Russia adjust to all of the new changes.

Although many people were happy that there was more freedom, some countries still misbehaved by breaking international laws and ruling as dictators. President Bush acted decisively to stop them and help their victims. In August 1990, the President of Iraq, Saddam Hussein, invaded the small country of Kuwait to take over their oil supply. In January 1991, Bush sent the U.S. military to free Kuwait from Hussein in what was called the Persian Gulf War. When the war ended, it was clear Bush had led America to a great victory.

*"This will not stand,
this aggression
against Kuwait."

Although Bush was very popular after the war, the economy wasn't as prosperous as before. The American people wanted a change so, when Bush ran for re-election in 1992, he lost to the Democratic Governor of Arkansas, Bill Clinton.

Americans with Disabilities Act

In 1990, President Bush signed a major civil rights law, the Americans with Disabilities Act, that prohibited discrimination based on disability. The law enabled millions of Americans with disabilities to enjoy the same opportunities as everyone else.

Retirement

Even though he was disappointed about losing, many Americans still appreciated Bush for his leadership during the war. In his retirement, Bush was able to enjoy spending time with his family, especially his 17 grandchildren. His sons continued the Bush family tradition of public service. Their oldest son, George W., was elected governor of Texas in 1994 and President of the United States in 2000. The second son, Jeb, was elected governor of Florida in 1998. He and Barbara were proud of their sons' accomplishments. In April 2018, Barbara died at the age of 92. A few months later, in November, George H.W. Bush died at the age of 94.

Legacy

Many of America's most famous presidents served two terms, such as George Washington, Thomas Jefferson, and Franklin D. Roosevelt (who was elected to four terms!). George H.W. Bush, on the other hand, served just one term because he lost his re-election bid in 1992. Americans often overlook their single-term presidents, believing that they weren't that important.

It is easy to overlook George H.W. Bush. He wasn't as charismatic or popular as other presidents, such as John F. Kennedy and Ronald Reagan. He did, however, serve the United States for a longer period of time than most other presidents, a time span that began in World War II and concluded with the end of the Cold War. During his one term as president, he led the country through very significant events, such as the fall of the Soviet Union and the Persian Gulf War.

Many people who serve in government for a long time end up becoming corrupt. Bush, however, maintained his reputation for integrity throughout his career. Whatever his shortcomings, he always did his best to serve the nation he loved.

Skydiving

George H.W. Bush was no stranger to flying. He served in World War II as a pilot. His days in the air didn't end when he returned home. In fact, after he left the presidency, he went skydiving several times, including on his 90th birthday.
