Regardless of an animal's age or apparent health status, it's important to understand that all anesthetic procedures have an element of risk including, but not limited to stroke or death.

Eagle Animal Clinic will be performing blood work on your pet prior to the surgery or procedure to identify potential problems that may impact our anesthetic protocol. We will also be placing an IV catheter in your pet's leg to administer intravenous fluids during the anesthetic procedure and recovery. These tests and procedures are required prior to general anesthesia to enable us to take the appropriate steps to reduce the risks from otherwise undetected problems.
