

Does your dog have chronic vomiting or diarrhea, decreased appetite, and/or weight loss?

Our hospital is currently enrolling dogs to participate in a clinical research trial to evaluate the safety and effectiveness of a new investigational drug for the management of canine inflammatory bowel disease (IBD).

Your dog might be eligible for participation if he or she:

- Is experiencing at least one sign of IBD (weight loss, inappetence/anorexia, vomiting, or diarrhea), and has history of at least one of these signs for three weeks
- Has completed a two-week food trial with a prescription diet recommended by your veterinarian (check with your veterinarian if your dog has not done a food trial)
- Has been on a consistent diet for at least 14 days
- Has received treatment with an anti-diarrheal antibiotic for at least two weeks within the past 90 days (check with your veterinarian if your dog has not had anti-diarrheal antibiotics in the last 90 days)
- Has received oral fenbendazole (Panacur®) for three days within the past 60 days
- Is not currently receiving steroids or other medications to suppress the immune system

Dogs that are part of the study will be evaluated over five consecutive weeks. If eligible for the study, dogs will receive physical examinations, bloodwork, diagnostic testing, and the assigned treatment at no charge.
