Interview

In general, how successful was the lesson? Did the students learn what you intended for them to learn? How do you know?

Yes, the lesson was very successful. I wanted them to learn that using common sense is the most basic thing an individual must have and not being so scholarly and intelligent. Upon hearing my students on their realizations after the lesson, I know they got what I want them to learn.

What evidence do you have of student learning? What do those samples reveal about those students' levels of engagement and understanding and learning?

I asked them to write a reflection paper about the story and asked 5 students to share their insights. By doing this activity, they can provide insights which they can relate to their lives.

How did your classroom procedures (routines, transitions, student movement and configuration) enhance or detract from the lesson? What, if anything, would you do different?

My routines are pretty basic but if there's something that I always forget, that is to provide a summary of the lesson or give a recap of the past lessons. Sometimes, I also do not rely on instructional materials.

Did you depart from your plan? If so, how and why?

No not really. I assure that everything planned from the start will be executed throughout the class.

Comment on different aspects of your instructional delivery (e.g., activities, group of students, materials and resources.) To what extent were they effective?

I rarely used instructional materials but I conduct engaging activities. I am more of the learning.

If you had an opportunity to teach this lesson again to the same group of students, what would you do differently?

I will show a short video clip about the story.

Coaching

What do you recommend to improve the teaching strategy?

Overall, Tuesday is great teacher, She acts as a facilitator and not the main source of knowledge. She let her students discover the message of the story by themselves through engaging activities. I can see the reactions of the students as they reflect and share their ideas. She only needs to focus on some areas which will be an additional help to measure learning:

1. The teacher should've provided proper expectations and objectives of the lesson so students will know what to achieve.
2. Dont forget to recap and ask about previous discussions. Providing recap of previous lessons help students refresh the knowledge and the learning. Also, it also measures if the students still have questions or need to clarify about the lesson.
3. Use instructional materials to enhance student learning. Using videos or something visual helps stimulate the senses for better learning experience.
