

Don't just sit there – share your hope!

Tell children's author, screenwriter and novelist Frank Cottrell-Boyce what has given you hope for the future.

This week's theme is all about our hopes for the future.

And we are so excited that Frank Cottrell-Boyce is supporting CAFOD's Summer of Hope campaign as part of our Coronavirus Appeal.

Frank will be capturing your thoughts and feelings at this challenging time and turning them into a unique piece of writing on behalf of CAFOD.

We invite young people across England and Wales and internationally, to be a part of this hopeful, inspirational piece that will reflect that we are a global family - each of us brothers and sisters – and that each person, especially the poorest in our world, matters.

Your challenge:

What has given you hope during this challenging time? It might be an object, an activity, a person, a phrase, or an idea.

In just one word, or one sentence, tell us what has given you hope. You can use pictures or designs to illustrate your words.

Please ask permission from an adult to email your ideas to schools@cafod.org.uk before Monday 27 July. If you've put your ideas down on paper and you want to send a photo of it, that's fine too! Don't forget to include your first name, your age, and your town.

Frank will read what you have said you are hopeful about. He will then write a short piece based on some of the things children and young people have told him.

We will share this piece through our schools work and on our digital channels in September.

“This is a time of isolation so it's a particularly brilliant idea to have a project that we all work on together. Because although we have to be apart, we know that we are all one. Although we are isolated, we are never alone.”

Frank Cottrell-Boyce

Please note, by sending in your submission (whether written or drawn) you give CAFOD permission to reproduce it for use for this project, and others, including media work.