

Clinician of the Future 2023

Elevating global voices in healthcare

Today's clinicians face challenges across a range of areas, from tackling staff shortages to keeping up with digital developments.

The new Clinician of the Future 2023 report, from Elsevier Health, is a global study of over 2,600 doctors and nurses from more than 100 countries. The report provides the latest insights on future trends in healthcare, continuing the global research conducted last year in the inaugural Clinician of the Future report.

"The combination of AI and the knowledge of doctors is a win win for the patient."
 – Doctor (USA)

Clinicians are seeking balance

Clinicians enjoy their work, but more are considering leaving their roles than in 2022, with 13% considering leaving healthcare altogether.

enjoy their jobs

are considering leaving their jobs in the next 2–3 years

are considering leaving healthcare in the next 2–3 years

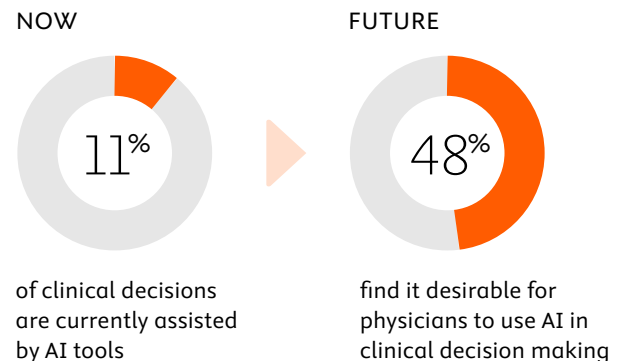

rate tackling the shortage of nurses as a priority

Technology and AI are empowering clinicians

There is a growing desire among clinicians to have digital technology expertise and use AI tools to learn and inform their decision making, but the in-person clinician–patient relationship will remain vital.

Clinicians say it's desirable for doctors and nurses to be digital experts

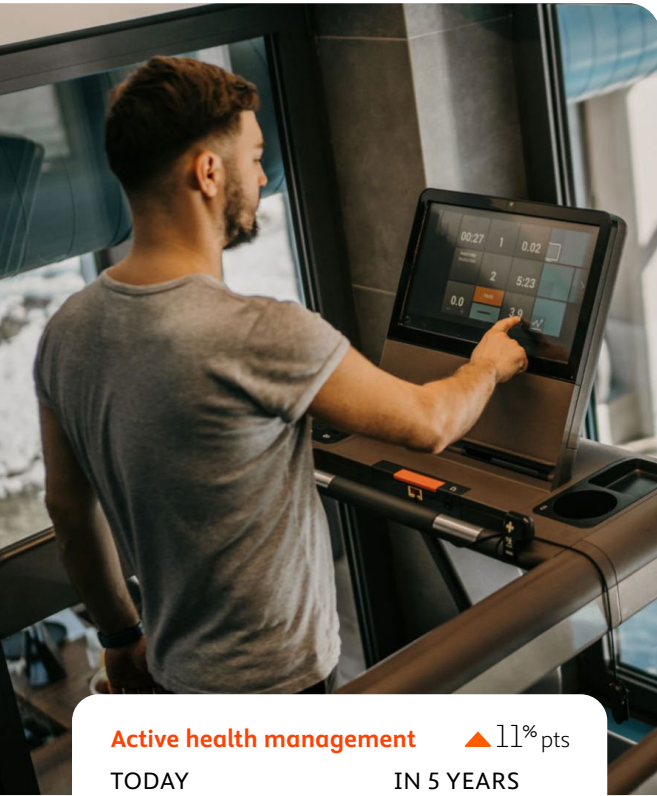

Doctors
73%

Nurses
71%

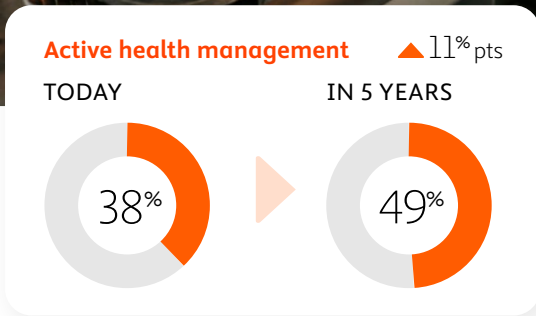

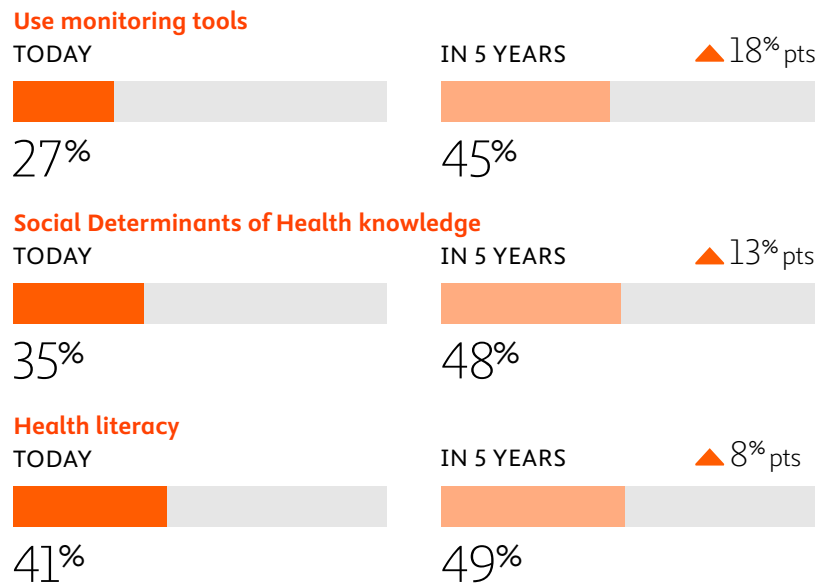

Knowledge and technology are transforming the clinician-patient relationship

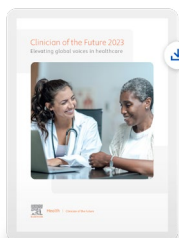

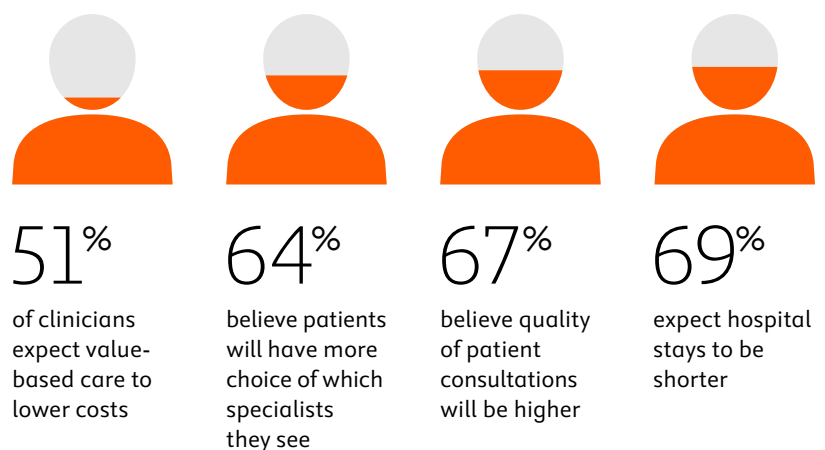

There is a trend towards patient empowerment with clinicians expecting the use of monitoring tools, knowledge of social determinants of health (SDOH), proactive health management, and health literacy to grow in the coming five years.

Clinicians imagine a value-based future

Overall, clinicians have a positive sentiment toward value-based care, with most expecting it to reduce the burden on secondary care and improve the patient experience while saving costs.

View the full report
Clinician of the Future 2023

Follow Elsevier Connect

